HOW TO START A RIOT

by I. M. A. Lie

On Tuesday of this week, Vancouver City Council approved a move to bring Vancouver into a possible age of repression. After a long afternoon session, nine alderman and Mayor Campbell took a recorded vote on the motion to purchase riot sticks for Vancouver City Police. The motion passed 5-4, with Ald. Calder abstaining and retiring from the Council Chambers.

The first part of the afternoon was occupied with Council's reception of delegations from groups and individuals. These groups opposing the purchase ranged from TACUY to UCWIC to the B.C. Civil Liberties Association. A number of private citizens, as well, presented themselves in an effort to persuade City Council to defeat the motion.

Two groups favouring the purchase also made their appearance. The first came from the Canadian League of Rights with a man by the name of Butler giving an extremely rightist presentation. The second was the Committee of Concerned Citizens, represented by a Mr. Spaetgens, whose argument was of a 'law and order' nature.

It was Spaetgens's wife who, during a 10 minute recess, attempted in a near hysterical fashion to have a Yellow Journal vendor arrested. Her attempt did not meet with any success, even from the council officer.

When debating began among the council, it became a matter of revelation of attitudes and positions.

Alderman Rankin made a forceful and articulate plea to defeat the motion. He spearheaded the attack by relating the question to general social problems—unemployment, poverty and the dignity of the deprived. With characteristic vigor Rankin questioned the real motives of the aldermen he knew would be voting in approval. He charged that most of those aldermen would not be voting according to their conscience but according to the upcoming elections.

Two aldermen (Calder and Hardwick) argued that the question was not in the province of normal council activity and elected to reserve their votes.

However, in council procedure, if an alderman reserves his vote and stays in the Chamber it is registered as a negative vote. Calder left the chamber and Hardwick stayed — thus his vote was recorded as a 'nay'.)

The aldermen approving the purchase took the tack of 'law and order' as might have been expected: These were Sweeney, Adams, Wilson, and Bird.

Mayor Campbell voted in favour as well, thus breaking a possible stalemate. Those opposing were Rankin, Linnell, and Phillips.

The majority of opposition arguments centered around the alternative possibility of opening up more communicative channels between police and the community at large. There was a surprising absence of rhetoric and most presentations reflected a genuine concern on the part of the community to strengthen an open exchange with police.

Yes, he will be a very good Mayor

It appeared as if all possibilities of inter-communication were thrown to wind with the result of the vote, which brought cries of dismay and disenchantment from the crowd that had turned out to participate in the effort to quash the motion.

Throughout the afternoon the onlookers were well-behaved and non-disruptive, but when the result of the ballot was read a voice yelled out over the din:— SEIG HEIL!!

And it now looks as if we are indeed in for a long hot summer.

NEW PETERSON LAWS

by JEANNINE MITCHELL

The anti-youth backlash is coming. Recently Mayor Tom Campbell gave the go-ahead on Fisk's request for 150 more riot clubs. And, of course, after a meeting with B.C. Police Chiefs Les Peterson announced some youth policy changes in his department.

The two main changes are the lowering of the juvenile age to 17 (meaning those over 16 will face adult court and prisons), and the cancellation of an experimental moratorium on minor municipal and provincial laws for juveniles.

According to Peterson, (who is expected to succeed Bennett as Socred bossman), "The increase in dissent and permissiveness amongst some of the youth in our province necessitates action being taken to ensure a respect for law and order."

LAWNORDER AT ROCK FESTIVALS, GATHERINGS

Peterson also mentioned that he had set in motion machinery that would result in the passing of new municipal statutes leading to increased law enforcement at rock festivals, demonstrations, and other large gatherings. Also, he noted that "people involved" in an unlawful assembly could be charged after the event.

Furthermore, the next house session is expected to bring forth new district laws that could outlaw

SECRET DRILLING IN GEORGIA STRAIT

by JEANNINE MITCHELL

(It seems that reports on local offshore oil activities recently published in the STRAIGHT have been too optimistic. This should set the record straight. Casper and Wendy, two friendly ghosts from a local university, have spent months closely watching the offshore oil developments that haven't made the news, though they should have. Anyone who cares at all about the quality of life in the Gulf Islands area and around the coast should be interested in their findings. Without a quick reaction, we could end up righteously screwed.)

Agatha Christie, where are you now that we need you? Was there really secret exploratory drilling in the Strait of Georgia last year? What is Lockheed up to in Juan de Fuca Strait? And what about right now - is there more drilling being done in Georgia Strait again? Figure it out if you can.

Last year, Canadian Pacific Oil and Gas undertook what was billed as a "seismic survey" in the Strait of Georgia. CP was acting on behalf of Gulf Oil, who then and now held permits on the area roughly between Saturna and Quadra Island, inclusive. One million acres were granted by the Provincial government, but only 700,000 acres were granted by the Federal government.

Seismic survey? A recent issue of OCEAN INDUSTRY magazine contained a map that showed wild-cat drilling as having been done in the Straits of Georgia last year.

Mistakes are made, but it's extremely unlikely that an error was made in this case. Research for such maps is thoroughly checked out, as a reputation for accuracy is vital to any journal dealing with such technically conversant readers. It seems quite likely that we were deliberately misinformed - that drilling did in fact take place in the Strait in secret.

First of all, under a Federal permit, the companies would only have to have notified the government if the holes had been over a thousand feet deep. Under a Provincial permit, they could drill without any permission at all, irregardless of depth. And 300,000 acres were under Provincial authority alone.

Also, it would be easy to drill in the Strait without attracting attention, especially in a lonelier area in the fall. For an ordinary-looking barge with a canvas-covered derrick is quite able to drill in an enclosed area like the Strait without appearing in the least bit suspicious.

A resident in Lund claimed that Gulf drilled supposed "water wells" on Hornando during the summer of '69 also. While this, if true, does not necessarily mean anything, it does indicate that Gulf was interested in the area around as well as on the island, for it is unusual for a major oil company to drill ordinary water wells - especially in the middle of an exploratory operation.

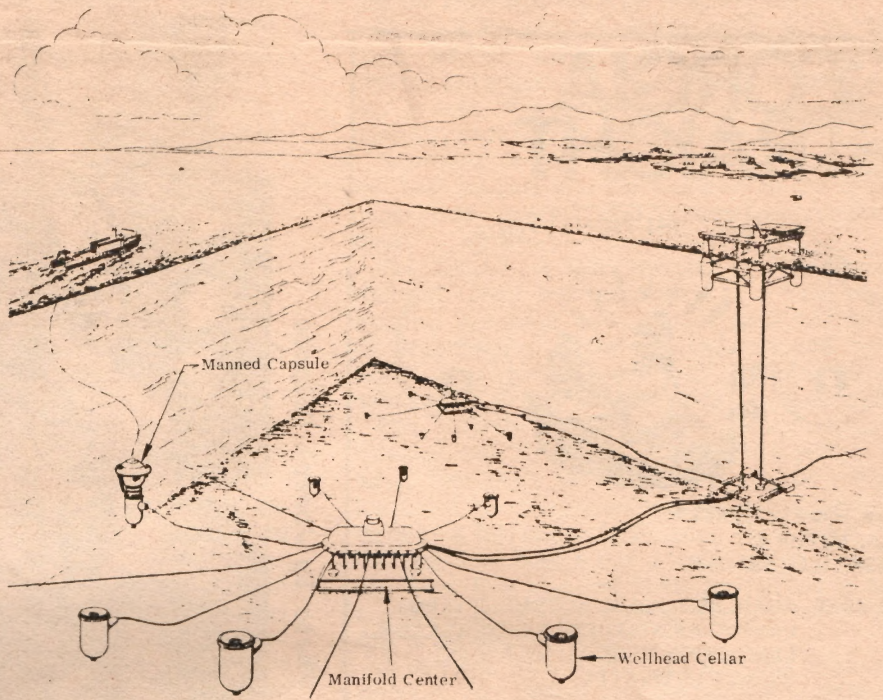

Incidentally, the above island (which is not owned by Gulf) has had work done on it recently that would make it ideal for executive conferences. It has a very large house, with a partially completed airstrip, and there is a road along part of the east side of the island as well as a small dock. It appears that another island in the Strait is owned by the vice-pres of Gulf's local operations, although this may be for recreational purposes only. Curlew Island is much smaller, is watched by a caretaker, also has a house and appears to be seldom used. The island is posted all over with NO TRESPASSING signs.

CP Oil and Gas (a subsidiary of CPR) finished their "seismic survey" in October, 1969. Since then, the public's fear of Santa Barbara-like oil spills in the Strait pulled the Federal Dept. of Fisheries into the act. Jack Davis, the Fisheries Minister, enthusiastically picked up the idea of an underwater park in the Strait which, if initiated, would keep oil drills away from the whole area.

But Joe Greene, the Federal minister of Mines, Security and Resources has not so far showed much interest in the idea. He has the final say in such a door rent-a-cops.

The convention provincial government maintains the club for campus co is their business anyway. They have business and info: 1967 Supreme Court decision that was concerned with how offshore mineral rights to the federal government. The decision was an advisory opinion that had been more a legal ruling. And after all, what's the point of a government really do if the Provincial government doesn't? A court case would be a control of students and although the Federal Fisheries Dept. can step in, it can only do so after danger to fish has been proven - that is, after the damage has been done.

What is the provincial government's position on drilling in the Strait? We all know ahead of time, of course: "Hurray!" Or in typical Wacky language: "Oil drilling will not be allowed in the Georgia Strait if there is any chance of pollution BUT THE GOVERN-

Drawing shows how Lockheed system will service oil wells on ocean floor. Surface ship (left) deploys manned capsule which mates with subsea wellhead cellar. Production from cellars flows to manifold centre where it would be mingled then passed to surface separation facility (right).

Diagram of the integrated, subsea system. (From Oilweek, 21:20, March 2, 1970.)

MENT WANTS TO KNOW IF THERE IS OIL THERE..." (from a statement made by W.A.C. Bennett on February 24, 1970 as reported in the Vancouver Express. Emphasis mine.) The Premier also said on an earlier occasion, "...oil companies could drill in the Strait of Georgia without a Federal permit and B.C. could collect the royalties without Federal approval." (Vancouver Sun, Dec. 19, 1969, p.1).

Unless the Provincial government has radically changed, it seems almost certain that a public hearing on Georgia Strait drilling would not be allowed. In a letter replying to this query by SPEC's Derrick Mallard, dated Oct. 30, 1969, Mines Minister Frank Richter refused to consider the idea.

Okay - that was last year. What's on the schedule for 1970? No further word on whether or not Offshore Oil and Gas will find a partner for a test drill program they had planned this summer in shallow water off the east coast of Graham Island. And no one knows if Union will use its 12 exploratory permits there this year. Whether these programs go through or not, they'll be just a small part of this year's offshore action. Because Lockheed Offshore Petroleum Services is here, bearing a gift for all good corporations.

It's called "A Subsea System for Deep Water Completion and Production". And it may revolutionize the offshore oil business. Basically, what it does is draw the oil flows from a number of wells into one single flow, which is piped upwards from the ocean floor. (See illustration).

In effect, it will make it economically feasible to produce wells that up to now were just capped as a result of being in deep water or having a relatively small oil show. Up to 90% of the wells that are drilled and do contain oil and gas fall under this category, so it's easy to see what an effect the subsea system could have on the oil industry.

The system may well speed up drilling off B.C., if it works, because many parts of the potentially oil-rich basins along the coast are deep down, and thus will become really accessible for the first time. Also, the three relatively deep holes that Shell reported as having oil and gas shows (they're off the west coast of Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlottes) would now presumably be worth producing, particularly if other holes could be found nearby.

Whether or not Shell will resume exploratory operations with the new system soon isn't clear. However, Shell was one of the sponsoring companies for Lockheed's local tests (Mobil and Placid also sponsored). Also, a spokesman for Lockheed suggested to one of the researchers that there was a possibility of drilling activity off the west coast of Vancouver Island - where two of Shell's oil shows were.

Lockheed appears to have other projects going, though. Late last fall, reliable word was received from California that Lockheed Missiles and Space Company, Sunnyvale, Calif. - which is another subsidiary of Lockheed Aircraft Corporation - ordered Lockheed Offshore Petroleum Services to do exploratory drilling in Juan de Fuca Strait.

The orders were given around November. In the fall of '69 a wellhead cellar was constructed and outfitted at Victoria Machinery Dept. However, Cramco Machinery, near Lockheed on Annacis Island, didn't receive a utility capsule till midwinter. (See illustration for explanation of terms).

Therefore, it seems unlikely that Lockheed could have gone ahead on any drilling work until a few months after word was first given. Since Lockheed is testing its system during May and June - it says - there may be a good chance that the drilling has not yet commenced. Another possibility, which seems fairly unlikely, is that "Juan de Fuca" was part of a code meant to throw off possible detection of Lockheed's real activities in the Strait of Georgia.

As of this writing, Lockheed has completed their shallow water tests in Departure Bay, Nanaimo - according to their news releases, anyway. Unless they change their mind, they plan to carry out a deep water test this month, in about 600 feet of water just north of Lasqueti Island. This area is a part of the Comox basin, considered one of the likeliest areas to yield oil.

Why is Lockheed testing their system in this area when water 600 feet deep is available closer to their base at Annacis Island?

Some observations:

- Six electric boats, of the type used by divers for moving equipment under water, were ordered late in 1969 from General Dynamics for use by Gulf Oil.

- Divers will undoubtedly be needed for some of the shallow water work involving pipefitting. And 21 apprentice pipefitters have been taking scuba diving lessons in North Vancouver since September, 1969. Says course instructor, Brian Wells, "If there are ever any oil wells put in the Georgia Strait these boys will get lots of work." (Vancouver Sun, Feb. 2, 1970, p. 13).

- This spring a self-propelled barge was outfitted at Vancouver Tug and Barge with a crane, a winch and large bundles of 30 foot pipe. It was next seen at the C.P. dock in Nanaimo with a utility capsule and wellhead cellar (integral parts of the subsea system) aboard. Another barge covered with canvas (see 6th paragraph) was moored alongside. The whole area was heavily guarded by Pinkerton security.

What is really going on, at Lasqueti? Will C.P. Oil and Gas drill a test well for Gulf in the Comox basin area and will Lockheed test their system on it? Or is a well already waiting? And is the aim to test Lockheed's system or to put a well(s) into production?

Only the oil companies and government officials concerned can answer these questions. But they're not telling.

HELIX DIES

Dear You,
This is it.

For two weeks the local non-media has been carrying stories about the folding of Helix. We, the staff, felt you should hear it also from us.

Several reasons have been presented as the "real" cause of the death of Helix. One of the most prevalent is Finance. The fact is Helix, like the federal government, could exist a millenium under the economy of a deficit spending (and undoubtedly do a better job at it than Big Brother.)

It is time. We are tired. Three years is a long time for an experiment to last. Those are the reasons.

A strong need exists in Seattle for alternative, radical, and honest media. Many people are working already to fill the vacancies. We urge you to also help support ALL your local conspiracies.

The Helix could not die without thanking all the people who have passed through it and us. Particularly Paul Dorpat (our father). But in no lesser degrees Tim Harvey, Walt Crowley, Jack Delay, Mike Crowley, Billy Ward, John Cunnick, Roger Downey, Merle, Bob Eyre, Lorenzo Milam, Bix, Tom Robbins, Larry and Paul Heald, and a whole continuing herd of moral gadflies. And you. Thank you.

The era, the page, has turned. The Helix is dead. We are growing, we are winning.

ALL POWER TO THE PEOPLE,
The Helix Staff.

BANG! YOU'RE DEAD

Dear Editor:

Here's a real tale of those beloved men overseas in the big muddy. I've enclosed a card they use to excite themselves, and also to pin on a killed NVA!

And it isn't only supported by LIFER PIGS: it's those boys that the people are trying to bring home. Believe it or not there are a good number of "the Boys" that dig this shit! I'm wondering if they should be let loose on the world again.

Also the other day there was a collection for the purpose of purchasing a plaque which the sandals of one killed NVA could be mounted on and given to the colonel.

I did not partake in such a perverted act, but the LIFERS and many a young man from this troop sure the fuck did. What the fuck is going down?

TRYING TRENDY

Dear Straight:

Following is a portion of the transcript from Prime Minister Trudeau's meeting with the Vancouver Women's Caucus on Sunday, June 14 in Vancouver.

VWC: If you agreed that this legislation (on abortion repeal) were urgent because women are dying every day, I asked you: Would you be prepared to try and legislate it immediately? I still did not get an answer, so therefore I'm going to place it this way: I think morality is involved in many areas: morality is involved in the whole economic structure of our country. In the Vancouver Sun this week you are quoted that you would be prepared in matters of economics to introduce legislation to get the Canadian Development Corporation into the House and on the books, providing that the Opposition promised to pass it in one day. I would ask you, would you make the same statement with regard to the Criminal Code that we're asking you to remove from the law?

PET: Yeah, if you could say that the House of Commons would pass it in one day, I would, uh, I would say that the public morality is ready for this abortion law.

VWC: You didn't ask about public morality. . . . will you try it? Try it.

PET: My answer is yes.

VWC: You didn't ask about public morality when you introduced that one. I'm asking you, can you not count on your own position to say you are prepared to enter, present, this legislation if the Opposition will guarantee they'll pass it in one day, as, I thought, a rather brazen proposition to make.

PET: Well, fine, yes - my answer is yes.

VWC: You would? Before the 26th?

PET: Sure.

VWC: Before the 26th of June?

PET: Sure.

VWC: Well, do it when you go back.

PET: I'm telling you that we tried to pass a lesser law. . .

VWC: Well, try it. . . No, it's now, we want you to try it now.

PET: We tried to pass a lesser law a year ago, and it took many many weeks.

VWC: Yes, but many things have happened in that year. Try it again this year.

1. Are you prepared to support the bringing forth of the amendment to the Criminal Code, Section Number 237, repealing all existing abortion laws?

2. Are you prepared to support the legislation to repeal all existing abortion laws?

Yours truly,

VANCOUVER WOMEN'S CAUCUS

FACE THE MOUSSAKA

Dear Fatman (or Editor),

I liked your recipes for Moussaka and Keskul - they were quite a tongue trip. But - Poached Stuffed Oranges was just too heavy. You want me to get 12 dates!! I did it, and I even got them all stoned at once, as you suggest. Though we were all pretty out of it, there was NO WAY I was going to con the chicks into a little spin in the blender - to get shredded.

Furthermore, should I insist they shave their hair?

Many oinks,
The Edmonton Foodfreak

Dear Edmonton,

I can see that you are a freak of taste and vision. In fact you may get a call from Fatman Studios to inaugurate the first Transcontinental Edmonton pig feast and Blender party. Good luck.

Apparently their sexual needs are well satisfied. I guess chicks are in more popular demand than guys, as they always have been anyway.

It seems to be the way we're built. Men first naturally chase women, and the women preen themselves and bathe gloriously in the warmth from the admiring eyes of the other sex.

Isn't it beautiful the love of a man for a woman?

GET BEHIND THE BUFFALO

BUFFALO PARTY
NAT'L HDQS.

4743 BROOKLYN
EM2-2353

SEATTLE, WA 98105

Dear Friends,

We would like to thank you for the overwhelming response to our coming convention. We'd like to take a moment now to further acquaint you with this event.

In many instances, due to lack of organization and communication, many splinter groups have been formed, groups having no general direction and taking actions that have caused a negative reaction within our nation. Diversity is not the path to achievement of our dream of unity in brotherhood and peace.

As young people, we understand that one of our biggest enemies is frustration; and frustration necessitates harsh and unrealistic actions. Our system provides the avenue on which we can travel forward with an intelligent approach to solving our many problems. It is hoped that the Buffalo Party can provide a rallying point; a way to do our thing peacefully and together. Our philosophy is certainly not comprised of ridiculous idealisms but rather vital ingredients to the happy existence of man on this earth: Peace, Freedom and a healthy life in which to attain these ends.

At this point we have become enemies of each other and ourselves as well, killing the earth and making the very air we breathe a death-trap for our children. We feel, brushing aside superficial political beliefs, that the common purpose of humanity from this time on, should be the preservation of our land, our people and life.

The First Annual Buffalo Party Convention will be held on a magnificent site near Mt. Ranier (just SE of Seattle, Wash.) on July 3rd, 4th and 5th. This is to be an organizational convention to establish our basic ideals and to come together in brotherhood and good times. Many speakers, entertainers and delegates will be assembled in an atmosphere that will hopefully perpetuate the spirit of the buffalo. Anyone who in any way shares the views of the Buffalo Party is urged to attend this first organizing convention.

We wish you peace,
THE BUFFALO PARTY

P.S. The delegate registration fee, which is $5.00 will include camping, parking, swimming and all festivities for the three days. And all funds above convention expenses are to be contributed to various community programs, including:

Children's Orthopedic Hospital
Mary Bridge Children's Hospital

THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING ERNEST

The Editor,
Georgia Straits Newspaper,
Vancouver, B.C.

Dear Sir,

I have just come from a public meeting held by SPEC at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre. Dr. Harger was kind enough to invite the spur-of-the-moment participation of a young man from the Vancouver Liberation Front.

I was particularly impressed by his earnestness. Since there are exchange programs in nearly every other field would it not be possible to arrange exchanges between these very interested people. I am sure that the Chinese Peoples' Republic would welcome the participation of these adherents to their ideology. Groups, albeit small, could actually live within the local communes and work parties for a given number of months or years. (We have travelled in many foreign countries so know that language would be no real barrier). In exchange I am sure that we could endure the close scrutiny of a like group or groups from the exchanging nation.

The alternative would be to create a fund to provide transportation for deserving candidates to the area of their choice.

To whom does one write to initiate such an exchange? which would undoubtedly prove educational to all concerned.

Yours truly,
Mrs. S.C. Brewer

ADVERTISING IS ALL YOU NEED

Dear Georgia Straight,

I wonder if you would be so kind to publish my letter in your very interesting and informative paper, for I have a question which I would like to ask you and your readers. My question is - how, and where does a shy, lonely, guy meet some girls in Vancouver, for friendship, companionship and LOVE. Advertising appears to be rather futile, because it is my belief and opinion that very few girls, if any, bother, nor need to read a newspaper advertisement, in order to find love, or whatever they are seeking.

I am in my early thirties, and I would sincerely appreciate hearing from any girl, any age, who may care to write to me. A letter from a girl, or girls, living anywhere in B.C. would be most welcome, and all letters shall be acknowledged. A million thanks to you, and all your many readers, who may care to give their kind consideration to my letter.

Love and Peace,

HOT HEADS BLOW JOBS

Dear Brothers and Sisters,

In the past two years I have watched the "Georgia Straight" become more and more an "Up Against the Wall" rag. Now there is the "Yellow Journal". What the fuck is happening to the brotherhood trip? Revolution? Of course revolution is necessary. It is our duty as people, brothers and sisters, to partake in the world revolution to break the military-industrial type power structure. BUT, let's do the fighting where it should be

The Stereo Boutique is now open to offer PEOPLE prices below wholesale. As direct importers we eliminate greedy middlemen. done. President Nixon doesn't give a shit if people break windows in Vancouver. He does give a shit if we piss on the Peach Arch, cause general boycotting of American goods, etc.

I have lived in Vancouver, gone through the usual head type hassles but Vancouver heat does not have a tendency to shoot people.

Yet.

Street fighting in Vancouver will do nothing but provide unfree people with bad vibrations. If we fight the heat with force they will win because force is their trip. If we can raise the bread to take each illegal search to court and hassle the man in ways that take him off the streets and into stuffy courtrooms perhaps then he will leave us to our thing. The general public is now beginning to accept heads as people. Let's not blow their heads too soon. Heads are now able to cop jobs more and more, bringing us into an economic label that demands a voice and makes us capable of taking injustice to court. I support revolution with my heart, by subscribing to Ramparts, by convincing through my actions, employers to provide us with jobs, and when the time comes I will probably cross the 49th parallel to join the fighting in the streets. Let us not use the revolution as a means of proving coolness and showing that we are as neat as the USA. Rather let us take a more effective approach and drown the shit with piss.

LEAST WANTED CANADIAN MAN

Dear Sir;

The Vancouver Sun and the Province refused to publish the following letter: Please use my full name and address in order to help the R.C.M.P. (subversive division records) in putting me on the top ten wanted list.

I am one of the first readers of your paper but do not agree with your tactics for revolution.

TEXT: How to get fast effortless liberal abortion laws:

Within one year the Canadian Women will receive the most liberal abortion laws by following simple effortless non-violent tactics.

1. No Canadian Woman should work or render any type of service for any party prior or during an election of any sort.
2. No Canadian Woman should vote for any politician who does not come out in verbal or written statements about how he stands on liberal abortion laws.
3. No Canadian Woman should go to church or work for any kind of religious organization. NEVER (most important) donate any money to it.

Canadian Women who are intelligent enough must realize that NOW is the time for a total non violent civil resistance movement to take root and sweep all of Canada. Canadian Women MUST be masters of their own bodies, not to be subjected to being bred like cattle for the glory of the state, to increase followers of the church and consumers of the business establishment I know from the experience of European politics that the churches would be the first to react to the classic karate chop below the black belt as soon as the Canadian Women awaken and refuse to render services to and donate MONEY to any church. CHURCHES ARE EXTREMELY SENSITIVE IN MONEY MATTERS (just as politicians are cowed by the loss of votes.)

Any Canadian Woman who believes that in this exclusive man-dominated corrupt political power game, politicians or senile church leaders are at all concerned, should know by now that only FIGHTING and SABOTAGE can and will correct the present situation which has reduced the woman in Canada to the level of a cow, to be bred at any time by any one.

Our present Prime Minister, who started out to win the young men, by pretending to be a swinger, to be groovy. As any experienced political person could easily foretell, he has shown his own ultra-conservative opinions in the matter of liberal abortion laws. His whole image is a gigantic swindle, out of proportion to that of any Canadian Prime Minister in the past. I am sure the people will never fall again for this kind of swindle, because the coming takeover of power by the younger generation will make short order of this type of "democratic leader".

CANADIAN WOMEN UNITE AND KNOW YOUR ENEMIES.

Very truly yours,
Charles Greul

VLF REVEALS THE SHOW

BY JEANNINE MITCHELL

Last week, SPEC had a public meeting at the Queen Elizabeth Playhouse. They charged a dollar admission, and passed the hat inside, as well as collecting further donations through a raffle. So it was quite a financial success, if nothing else.

See text of Dr. Knelman's speech on page 9 ("Technological Orgasm")

Outside the door four people from the Vancouver Liberation Front gave out sheets putting down SPEC and members as too committed to the system to bring about the necessary change. And the people that attended the meeting, with some exceptions, certainly backed up the VLF accusations by the way they reacted when directly challenged.

First Dr. Hugh Iltis, a Wisconsin University botanist spoke. He made a few new points, but seemed to think that the environmental dangers that threatened us were the likelihood that our grandchildren would have no more flowers. By far the most optimistic speaker on environmental collapse that I have ever heard.

Then Dr. Fred Knelman came on the stage. We'd been talking to him earlier, and he seemed like a nice guy. About 50 years old, but he had an open mind. Unfortunately he was on the tail end of a speaking tour, and his words and thoughts came out jumbled and confused; nevertheless it was a good talk.

I think that he helped keep the meeting together by taking the VLF people, who'd come in to listen and talk, seriously — unlike most of the other people present. When one guy from the VLF stood up after Iltis' speech, and asked the audience politely if they had learned anything, he got an almost hysterically ugly reaction from the mostly middle-class, middle aged crowd. They shouted, "Throw him out", "Next question", and "Sit down" with great democratic fervor.

Knelman later told them that it was a basic question that should have been taken seriously, and later talked on stage with the guy who had asked the question. (Robin Harger, the chairman, had invited him to talk for five minutes "just so you can't say we didn't ask you.")

I think that the VLF misunderstood some of Knelman's points, but maybe he himself didn't quite realize the impact of his words. Because to me it seemed he was advocating a genuine revolution of the entire political, economic, human value system. From the way his audience reacted before and after his speech, it would appear that the message didn't get through to many. Knelman said, "We'll have to force (change of the structure). But he admitted to the VLF speaker later, "I don't know how. . ." He told the guy from the VLF at one point that he thought he sounded conservative, presumably because Knelman feels that no existing ideology, left or right, has the final answer to the problems as he sees them. The VLF did not seem to have all the answers that evening. But if they had had them, I doubt if the audience would have listened. As it was, over half automatically walked out when they were given the floor. Pretty sad.

(This is separate. Later on in the meeting the VLF was given the floor. They replied to some of the points that Knelman made — attacking the lack of specific suggestions on how to achieve the radical change he said was necessary. Knelman asked the VLF speaker if he could suggest a country that was running itself on a steady basis — recycling its resources, and controlling production and consumption. The VLF speaker suggested that the Republic of China was working in that direction. This is Knelman's reply: "If you look at the situation in China vis-a-vis the attempt to achieve power parity with the United States in nuclear weapons, you will see the gravest infraction of the degradation of the environment because China has limited resources — it sees itself threatened — now that threat . . . may be perfectly valid. Therefore it's in a race to achieve power parity.

In that race to build the weapons, to build the delivery systems (which requires tremendous amounts of metals and transference of radioactive materials into warheads), they can't count the social costs. They defer them in exactly the same way — except they defer them even more completely, because they're behind and they have to catch up. And therefore, they are raping their environment at an even faster rate than we are, because they see themselves in a struggle for survival with the U.S."

Knelman later mentioned that Sweden will in the next decade voluntarily slide from #2 to #11 on the world Gross National Product scale, realizing the need to cut back on consumption. He said that Sweden is leading the way in developing a nation that puts quality of life before quantity of things.)

rock festivals in areas outside municipal boundaries.

Police Chief Fisk applauded the changes, but lamented the postponement of action on other proposals given by the B.C. Association of Police Chiefs to the attorney-general.

These included recommendations for:

- a "discipline diagnostic centre" for "problem" juveniles
- waiting for court appearances.
- a "detention centre" for "hardcore" juvenile offenders
- increased discipline in group and foster homes
- return of sentencing power to juvenile court judges

(Right now, juvenile judges only decide innocence or guilt, with the punishment being left to social workers and probation officers. The overwhelming majority of 'guilty' juveniles up till now were put on probation, with more disturbed kids being sent to Brannan Lake or Willingdon.) The proposals are now under consideration by the attorney-general's department.

Peterson softened the impact of his announcement of the age-lowering by saying there would be "careful screening" of 17 year old offenders by police, social workers, and probation officers before laying of charges. One who doubts that this theory will be validated in general practice is Mervyn Davis, executive director of the John Howard Society. He said that in adult court charges are usually laid without such precautionary measures, and this was unlikely to change.

As a result, he fears, more young people will be sent to jail. "Once you get kids into the so-called correctional stream you are almost guaranteed that they won't be corrected," Davis said. He suggested that the policy changes reflect a growing "right-wing backlash" against youth.

MORATORIUM NOT GIVEN FAIR CHANCE

The moratorium experiment lasted for only 2 and a half years. Why did it come about and why did it fail? First of all, the decision was made by former AG Robert Bonner to stop laying charges on juveniles for relatively minor offences such as breaches of the liquor law and motor vehicle act because of a federal ruling under the Juvenile Delinquent Act that gave criminal records to juveniles for such offenses. Adults did not get criminal records for breaking these same laws.

When the federal government did not act on

RETURN TO WOOD$TOCK

by TONY TUGWELL

Street people went back to Woodstock at the Downtown theatre last Friday.

The week before the street people had been stopped by cops when they had tried to crash the movie. Last Friday they were saying the same thing: the movie is an exploitation of the youth culture. But their tactics were different. They were asking people to boycott the movie.

Four people sat by the theatre and played drums while about 15 danced and picketed outside the theatre — very loud, cheerful and alive. They chanted "Peace, Love, Shut it down." Other demonstrators handed leaflets to the crowd that quickly gathered. They tried to talk people out of going to the movie.

And they were fairly successful. It appeared to me that at least one third of the people coming to the movie were turned away by the demonstration. It was hard to keep track of numbers, because people who bought tickets were let into the lobby immediately. But it looked like 200 to 250 people went to the second show on Friday night. For comparison the second showing Saturday night which was free from demonstrations drew a crowd of over 400.

When I called the manager however, he said the demonstration had done no harm. "If anything it has upped our attendance", he told me somewhat snarkily over the phone. But he wouldn't tell me how many people had gone to the second showing on Friday night: "We don't give out any information."

The manager was much in view on Friday. Glaring through the glass. Pacing in front of the theatre. And sometimes trying to intimidate demonstrators by placing his small frame right beside them as they tried to convince a movie-goer that his money was better spent elsewhere.

A typical conversation went: "Are you going to see Woodstock?"

"That's why I'm here."

"Well we're asking people not to go. We think it's a rip off. And we'd like you to read this leaflet before you make up your mind."

Some people were surprised that they were being asked to boycott the movie. They said they had thought the demonstration was a slick PR job. But the leaflet set them straight:

"As members of the unpaid actors union, we would like to ask you to think twice about attending the movie Woodstock."

"If the real WOODSTOCK meant anything, it meant that we should be together, to share our collective culture. The Woodstock movie then is a "rip-off" of the first order, in that the abnormally and unjustifiably high prices that are being charged to view it, throughout the continent, make it impossible for the people whose culture made the real event beautiful and FREE to attend."

"The movie cost $200,000 to make and was sold to Warner Bros. for one million dollars, who now stand to make $20 — 40,000,000 off our rock'n'roll life culture. Warner Bros doesn't give two shits whether thousands of young people, the "stars" don't have food to eat, a place to sleep, or decent clothes to wear in Vancouver this summer. They only care about $$$$$$.

Michael Wadleigh, the man who made the movie, has said that he would refuse to pay the prices to see his own movie (which has been butchered in Warner Bros. editing room). He has been regularly picketing in Los Angeles against the "rip-off" of the "People's movie". He is picketing the movie Woodstock for the same reason we are: It has been turned into another means of exploiting the youth community, without returning anything to that community, by culture vultures seeking the fast buck.

"Our demand is simply that the price be dropped to $1.50 for two days, a Friday and Saturday, and that the entire take for those two days be contributed to community services (the free store, switchboard, people's defence fund, etc.). That is not too much to ask from a company (W.B.) which stands to make millions off us."

"Join us in boycotting this movie. If exploitation (even under the guise of hip kapitalism) continues, then the beauty and love that was WOODSTOCK has been shafted, and the experience and lessons of the movie will fall upon deaf ears. FREE VANCOUVER — FREE THE NORTH — NLF OF YIP."

After reading the leaflet, some people said they agreed but even so wanted to see the movie. Others who agreed decided there were other shows in town they could go to instead.

One person said: "You're not going to tell me what to do. But he was told no one was strong-arming him. He was just being asked not to go to the movie."

A heavy man about 40 came up and asked me what the demonstration was all about. I told him. He agreed that the movie was exploitation. But he also said: "The whole society is exploitation."

There were cops around, but they didn't hassle the demonstration as much as they had the week before when people had tried to get into the theatre free.

Some cops on bikes roared up in front of the theatre, stopped and then went off again without doing much.

A car load of cops pulled up, and several got out. One was a beefy red-headed cop who had pushed people around with extra heaviness at the demonstration the week before.

"He's the one. He's the bastard," someone called.

And the cop turned around, hands on hips, sucking his lip. He stood there, challenging, and then went back to the car. The loud speaker from the cop car screeched something about clearing the streets. But it was badly tuned, and the message came across as noise.

The cop car left and the demonstrators continued talking to people going into the theatre. They marched in a circle in front of the theatre, chanting "Free the Culture. Free Woodstock. Smash Capitalism." Two people drove bicycles up and down in front of the theatre carrying "All Power to the People" signs.

After the second show started, I asked the woman in the ticket booth how many had gone in. She wouldn't tell me. And then she went after the Straight.

"All the passes we give out to you guys and then you go and write those things in the paper," she said. She was referring to the article I had written in the Straight about the first demonstration, and also to the fact that the Straight staff and friends got a fat load of free tickets to Woodstock.

It was a way of saying: "We thought we'd bought you off."

"It's incredible," said the woman selling tickets. I hadn't taken a free pass and said so — with the right tone of self-righteousness.

As the demonstration was packing up to go off to English Bay for a dance on the beach, one of the ushers came up and said "You guys are sure trying to hurt us."

He was told that the demonstration wasn't against him. He had to work and was probably being ripped off by the management by being underpaid anyway. Instead the demonstration was against the manager of the theatre and the owners of the film (Warner Bros.) who would make all the money while returning nothing to the people.

He asked: Didn't we think other theatres were doing the same thing. We agreed. Woodstock is just the most obvious example. And someone else said all the theatres would all be closed down in the revolution and then opened up in the name of the people.

Woodstock is on for at least another week. There may be more demonstrations. There was one Saturday night. As the audience left the final showing they were met by people marching and singing in front of the theatre.

HELP NOW HELP

On Thursday night, June 18, somebody ripped off a Canon movie camera and a Bell and Howell tape recorder from the NOW HELP bus. Also missing are a Philco radio and about twenty record albums. This stuff was being used to help "the people" by the volunteers on the bus. It's important for us to have it while we are operating the bus. Since the people responsible for the equipment don't have the money to pay for it, we would really dig having it returned. The equipment can be returned with no cop hassles, by phoning NOW at 736-7376 or the Inner-City Service Project at 879-0477, or left at the Georgia Straight office, 56 A Powell St, Alexandra Neighbourhood House (7th and Pine), the NOW bus or the Last Chance Cafe on 4th Avenue. Please return this stuff — a lot of people are losing valuable service because of its loss. Thanks a lot.

BIRTH CONTROL HANDBOOK, originally published by the Students Society of McGill University.*

COITUS INTER- RUPTUS

The oldest method of birth control known to be still in use is coitus interruptus ("withdrawal" or "being careful"). Even today it may be the most widely used method.

Coitus interruptus is clearly better than no method at all, however it is far from safe.

Method:

This method of conception control is very simple: just before orgasm the male withdraws his penis from the vagina and region of external genitalia of his partner, and ejaculates on the skin of the woman's stomach or lower abdomen region, or on to the bedclothes. The man's sperm is thus prevented from entering the vagina, and pregnancy cannot occur.

However, both partners are often left tense and unsatisfied because of this sudden interruption of coitus. The ejaculation does not have the benefit of assisting pressure of the vagina. Moreover, the woman is deserted at the high point of excitement. This can lead to harmful psychic and physical effects because of frustrated orgasm and congested genital organs.

Difficulties involved with method:

In the presence of a suitable moist environment, sperm may not only survive but also succeed in reaching the ovum and effecting fertilization. During sexual intercourse, the external female genitalia as well as the vagina are sufficiently moistened by coital secretions to provide an environment in which sperm may not only survive but even migrate within the reproductive tract. Therefore if intercourse takes place during a period or time when fertilization of the egg is possible, depositing the ejaculate near the external female genitalia could result in pregnancy.

It is important to remember that sperm cells within semen possess mobility of their own. When semen is deposited between the labia (external lips of the vagina), the moisture may often be sufficient for sperm to retain and exercise this mobility (whereas semen deposited on the skin quickly evaporates and sperm die).

Many couples often rely on intercourse between the labia or between the thighs in the mistaken belief that they do not run the risk of pregnancy. However cases are recorded of women who have become pregnant although the hymen remained intact (i.e. they were still technically virgins). Ejaculation too close to the external female genitalia can cause pregnancy.

Effective coitus interruptus, involving withdrawal before ejaculation, requires the man to be aware in advance of when ejaculation will occur. However evidence shows that complete ejaculation in a single emission (one powerful gush) occurs less than 50% of the time. At other times semen can be expelled intermittently or in a slow stream. Whether in these cases the man is aware of the exact moment when semen begins to escape, or whether he feels only the last portion of the ejaculation, is not known.

Also, Kinsey points out that with the imminence of orgasm both men and women experience a condition that varies from mild to considerable clouding of consciousness, in which all coital movements lose their voluntary character and become involuntary. This condition may last for several seconds, and during it a conscious action such as withdrawal is impossible. The shorter the duration of coitus, the more difficult it is for the man to recognize the boundary between different phases of felling and behaviour. Those who lack considerable sexual experience find it even more difficult to determine accurately and consistently the imminence of orgasm.

Sperm may enter the vagina even if withdrawal is successful because sperm cells may leak at the beginning of coitus. When erection occurs, a drop of liquid is produced by mucous glands inside the urethral opening. Spermatozoa (sperm cells) mobile and viable after many hours, have been found in these mucous drops as well as in ordinary urine specimens. Because such a drop of moisture may actually be deposited in the vagina at the beginning of coitus, conception could theoretically result even though intercourse is interrupted before ejaculation.

There are further difficulties involved for men who are not circumcised. If coitus occurs once, followed by ejaculation, some sperm may remain alive and mobile underneath the foreskin. If coitus then occurs a second time, these living sperm may be introduced into the vagina.

To summarize, pregnancy may result despite use of coitus interruptus since sperm can enter the vagina in the following ways:

1. ejaculation in stages, or interruption of coitus after some semen has already been deposited in the vagina;
2. inability of some men to withdraw the penis from the vagina in time;
3. ejaculation close enough to the external sexual organs of the woman that spermatozoa can migrate into the vagina;
4. before ejaculation, escape of a drop of semen containing a number of sperm;
5. presence of sperm underneath the foreskin of men who are not circumcised.

The chances that No.4 or No.5 would lead to pregnancy are slight because of the very small number of sperm involved.

Interrelated physiological and psychological problems connected with method:

Masters and Johnson have clearly demonstrated that with sexual excitation complex anatomical and physiological changes occur in genital and perigenital structures. After orgasm complementary processes occur which return the structures to a normal state. However this process fails to occur in the same orderly and relatively rapid fashion if sexual excitation has not culminated in orgasm. Occasional failure to reach climax after excitation is probably not harmful but it would be unrealistic to expect that repeated interruption would not result in some observable changes.

Urologists condemn coitus interruptus, attributing to it various difficulties with the male prostrate gland. However, there have been no methodical studies on this question, and therefore conclusions are not well substantiated.

Psychological problems related to coitus interruptus have been considered more carefully, and, due to a relation with such problems as impotency and frigidity, coitus interruptus can often be a dangerous practice.

Some cases of impotence which occur in connection with coitus interruptus can certainly be explained on a physiological basis, especially for those men who have a premature ejaculation. However, the majority are probably far more closely linked to psychological factors. The man may be tense and anxious, afraid of not being able to control himself and at the same time afraid of a possible disturbance of potency. If he has ever been impotent while attempting coitus interruptus he may soon find himself in the vicious circle so characteristic of impotent men. "Unsuccessful" coitus produces the strong fear that the next attempt will also be unsuccessful, which almost unavoidably leads to exactly what is feared. The man may soon believe himself "incapable" and be overwhelmed at the thought that his partner will also believe it. This can be an almost insoluble problem, especially at the beginning of a relationship, before the partners know each other well.

The psychological stress of coitus interruptus can also result in unresponsiveness in women. Frigidity develops primarily on a psychological basis, although it can also result from certain physiological conditions (as can impotency in men). It is certain that in most cases a combination of factors is present.

In older literature it is stated that withdrawal without orgasm for women can lead to a congestion of blood in pelvic organs and eventually to pelvic inflammation. However, interrupted coitus differs from completed coitus only by seconds, and if the partners are in sexual harmony the interruption can only mean that on some occasions the woman's orgasm is somewhat less strong than on others. Although this may become a psychological problem if the woman believes that she has missed something important, it cannot lead to physical damage.

The woman's fear and lack of confidence can also be important contributing factors to her inability to respond. She may fear she will be cheated of orgasm of that the man may not withdraw in time, and thus may be tense during the entire coitus. Thus, the same cycle which is seen in men can result - fear, causing incapacity, causing fear.

other methods

So-called contraceptive methods which are, for all practical purposes, ineffective need not be considered extensively by this handbook. These methods include: immediate post-coital douching, total self-restriction of female orgasm known as "holding back", prolonged nursing and coitus reservatus.

There are serious drawbacks to use of the douche as a contraceptive method. If there is to be any possibility of effectiveness for conception control, the douche must be used immediately after intercourse - an unpleasant interruption for the woman. More significantly, at that time, the pressure of the douche might easily force concentrated sperm into the cervical orifice; sperm could very well continue and effect fertilization. On the other hand, if the pressure of the douche is inadequate to distend the vagina, sperm remain untouched in the vaginal crevices. For these reasons the douche should not be considered a contraceptive method, and must not be used for conception control.

It should be noted that too frequent douching is harmful since it destroys protective bacteria in the vagina.

The strong coal tar "feminine hygiene" disinfectants should never be used. If not mixed properly, they will burn the tissues.

It is a relatively common belief that if the female partner "holds back" and does not permit herself to achieve orgasm during coitus, pregnancy is impossible. This belief is based on the misconception that women, like men, ejaculate in orgasm a substance that is necessary for fertilization. While it is true that there is a release of fluids when a woman reaches a sexual climax, these fluids simply facilitate the swimming movement of sperm. In the partial absence of these secretions (absence is never complete), sperm can still reach the Fallopian tubes and fertilize an egg. There have been many pregnancies in women who have never had orgasm.

There is no truth to the belief that as long as a woman is nursing a baby she cannot conceive. Because of hormonal balances, during early months of breast feeding ovulation may be delayed, but this protection does not last long, nor is it reliable.

The practice of coitus reservatus is similar to coitus interruptus (withdrawal). The essential difference is that whereas in coitus interruptus the male partner does not allow himself to achieve orgasm and ejaculate within the woman's body, in coitus reservatus there is no ejaculation. The male does not withdraw, but remains in sexual contact during the female partner's orgasm and gradually his erection subsides. Such control for an hour or longer, it has been reported, requires training; further it is highly probable that some sperm will escape through the erected penis even though the male partner does not ejaculate. The control that is necessary for utilization of coitus reservatus as a contraceptive method cannot be maintained by many men. The same psychological and physiological arguments against coitus interruptus are directed against coitus reservatus.

and others! FRI. 26 JUNE

The following is slightly modified text (he was tired and some of the wording was confused) of a speech made by Dr. Fred Knelman at last week's open meeting of SPEC. Dr. Knelman is actively involved in changing the code of ethics for engineers and scientists. He is an engineer himself - "regrettably" he says.

I'd like to give you some kind of overall perspective of 'the environmental problem'. Not all of us see this as having the highest priority. Some of us who live in ghettos - some of us who are black, or are politically radical - may see other things as having higher priorities.

But I think that we spend too much time attacking symptoms; too much energy is spent simply reacting on a very narrow, regional basis. Of course, this is important too, but at some point we all have to come to grips with the basic problems.

Now the one activity that is growing at incredible rates - so that no other area of human activity can compare with it - are all fields of science and technology. It doesn't matter what area you study, whether it's central or peripheral, overseas flights or the size of bombs . . . All these areas are growing at rates of 7-10% per year. That's four times as fast as population. They are all growing without any visible controls.

We have here, of course, a totally laissez-faire response to technology. An illustration of this response is this law of technological man: invention is automatically followed by use.

There are no decisions made at any point on whether or not to proceed with, say, the SST - supersonic transport. The government merely rubberstamps into use what has been rubberstamped into production by industry. Nobody thinks about the outcome - whether or not the SST will be in fact an improvement on present lifestyles. And this rubberstamping proceeded despite thousands of individual court cases and a storm of protest about the likelihood of widespread ecological damage from sonic booms alone. The very existence of means constantly, inevitably determines ends.

There is a basic reason for this. And that is - nothing serves the means of power more immediately and completely than technological prominence. The achievement of technological power is of direct service to the economic and political structures that themselves reinforce the growth of technology. The 'system' is self-reinforcing: a vicious circle that is extremely difficult to crack from within.

It isn't hard to find statistics that illustrate what I mean by this phenomena of uncontrolled growth. A particularly prime example is military technology.

Let's just take a look at the increase in the size of bombs between 1945 and 1954. (Now in early July 1945, the largest single bomb available was of a strength equivalent to about 8 tons of TNT.) On July 16, the Americans tested a new device at Alamogordo that was equal to 20,000 tons of TNT. In 1950, the hydrogen device was between 4 and 5 million tons of TNT. In 1954, the famous "Bravo" nuclear bomb was about 10 million tons. In nine years a single bomb had grown in power from 8 tons to 10 million tons of TNT.

This incredible growth is not matched anywhere by social controls. Our only means of worldwide social controls during wars are the 'international' bodies of law and order. They don't even approach the capacity necessary to stop this mad self-defeating arms race.

This issue of the lack of human control over the exploding technology is THE critical issue of our time. And the reason that controls never catch up is, once again, that this technological pay-off is so irresistible to the political structures that are being served by it.

Under our present structures or systems then, we have a laissez-faire, insane, runaway growth of technology on the one hand, and on the other, increasingly lagging human controls and an inability to create political and economic structures that would control growth.

Now, this growth dilemma is a universal dilemma - you can apply it to population, for instance.

A Canadian in his lifetime consumes about 50 times the resources and energy of an east indian in his lifetime. We can't do that - when the total quantity of earthly resources are so limited. We can't continue to consume at our rate while those in the underdeveloped countries multiply and at the same time have rising expectations. The pervasion of media into the most remote areas of the globe have resulted in a suddenly awakened desire for wealth and goods on a scale with the wealthy nations of the world. We have a geometrically increasing population with geometrically increasing wants.

So technology has rendered all kinds of structures totally obsolete - but we haven't yet learned to re-structure.

Pollution is a beautiful example of this - one of the prime examples. In the kind of political and economic structures we have now - we have built-in-competitions to pollute. (If you take 2 companies, and they're both in the same production area, and they both know that they don't have to pay for pollution - that's immorally deferred as a social cost, a tax on the future - then Company A, if it pollutes more than Company B, is a richer, more successful company. For Company B has expended some of the profits into pollution equipment while its rival has invested all its profits into further expansion.

Of course, the success of Company A is a delusion, for under this type of economic structure we are heading for a serious ecological depression within the decade. Already in Toronto, and Rotterdam, along with other parts of the world, there have been seven highly documented cases in the last twenty years relating measured levels of air pollution with mass deaths from diseases in the lower respiratory tract. So in Toronto, when the pollution level becomes so great that the companies responsible can be detected, then those companies have to close down until the level drops again. This is something that is going to happen everywhere until there can be no production at all, because otherwise large-scale human deaths from air pollution will become common. So we face an ecologically-triggered depression unless we change the economic and political structures responsible for the dilemma.

There is something inherently wrong and destructive in this kind of theology of growth. And in the fact that all of our structures are so dedicated to it.

Look, as someone once put it, if you had lived in 1928 in Los Angeles, and could have gone from 1928 to 1968 in 24 hours, and seen the difference, you would have had a revolution. Now why would Vancouver like to become like Los Angeles? (Probably refers to plans now being settled to bring freeways to Vancouver.)

Why are we locked in, paralyzed, trapped inside a system that we now realize is on a collision course with disaster? We have to unlock ourselves.

I believe that more and more our concern must not be just the pollution problem. That isn't enough. For some, as I've pointed out, it isn't the issue of greatest priority. It may not be the issue of highest priority for the world: there could be an escalation in Indo-China. It is quite possible it could extend to the dropping of nuclear bombs. There's a lot of documentary support for that idea - a great deal.

Then the issue of survival will not be peace-time pollution - as the issue of survival is not the issue if you are starving. So that we must more and more think of the environment as the total environment in which there are at least four highly discernible world problems.

Population IS one. A population bomb going off in India

Fuck Reprise, Fuck Ramparts

Joni Mitchell's new album will mean more to some than to others.

Amy Foster, twenty-three years old and quietly beautiful, was sitting in her orange inflatable chair listening to Neil Young's second album and toying indifferently with the enormous antique ring on the index finger of her left hand. Mostly she was trying with the usual lack of success to avoid lapsing into that state of bored listlessness she'd found herself in so frequently of late as she waited for the Country Store delivery boy to arrive with her groceries and RIT, with which she planned to pass the evening by tie-dyeing some curtains for her '64 Chevy camper.

To say simply that she had been under the weather these past few days would have been to wildly understate the case. Indeed, ever since she had been told on Sunday night by a mutual acquaintance that David, who had left her a month ago in favor of some chick he had met at the Jeans West shop he managed, had up and married, Amy had been more than a little inclined to chucking everything in the back of her camper and taking off for indefinite points north to try to get her head back together. Today, of course, was no exception: "I'm incredibly down, man," she observed to herself as the turntable's arm lifted quietly off "Down By The River" and someone began knocking impatiently at the back door.

It was the delivery boy. After depositing her groceries on the kitchen table he stopped to admire the Van Morrison collage she had made, so Amy offered him some tea. This he accepted with a gracious and endearing toothy smile.

As they sat in the living room sipping Constant Comment with orange honey mixed in and listening to side one of Deja Vu he, whose name turned out to be Barry, took out a concise little joint, lit it and took a couple of polite hits, and passed it over to Amy. "Mellow," she responded, her spirits lifting slightly.

"Hey, you really have a far-out system here," Barry commented in reference to her stereo set-up as she handed the joint back. "Do you think we could listen to some of Joni Mitchell's new album on it," for he had purchased Ladies of the Canyon at the Music Hall just that afternoon. "Hey, groovy," agreed Amy, who had not even realized that the album had been released.

So Barry brought it in and placed it on the turntable. By the time "For Free" was over they were both quite mellow indeed. As much as they downed her by reminding her all too vividly of her now-irrevocably-consummated relationship with David, "Willy" and "Conversation" were somehow reassuring—there was someone else, even another canyon lady, who really knew. Amy began to feel a little better.

By the time "Circle Game" had finished, Amy was no longer dejectedly contemplating splitting for Oregon. In fact, she could scarcely wait for the sun to get through setting so she could drive up to the top of Lookout and watch Los Angeles twinkle beneath the indigo April sky.

Joni Mitchell's Ladies of the Canyon On Reprise albums and tapes

There's one thing, simply, to be said: hippie capitalism is capitalism.

The above ad appears full-page as the back cover of the current RAMPARTS magazine.

There used to be puzzles for kids in which the idea was to see how many hidden faces or objects you could pick out of a seemingly ordinary picture. Treat this put-on ad in exactly the same way.

Amy is "quietly beautiful": as Miss Hip America, could she be "quietly ugly"? So here's your favorite groovy record company selling you right off the bat that crap about beauty, that image of woman that Women's Caucus attempts to expose.

As the items pile up (orange inflatable chair, antique ring, Chevy camper, stereo, tie-dye curtains) we note a couple things about the ad as a whole, and its presuppositions. The ad fails because it's constructed on a principle of hippy soup, that is, it's almost as though the agency had a contest among its ad writers to see how many elements of hip culture could be crammed into one package, and obviously they've put in so many things that for a minute you think the whole thing's a put-on. Then notice how much of this portrayal of hip culture is merely material. I mean notice it for yourself, if you have most of the crap Amy has... "the extent to which this civilization transforms the object world into an extension of man's mind and body... the people recognize themselves in their commodities..." (Marcuse, One-Dimensional Man).

The ad also works as an instructional device whether you're male or female. If a woman, it's a quick-kit for How To Be A Hip Chick — it tells you all the things you need to do and have to be one, especially this record they're selling. That's the story behind the story of course. You've got to remember what this is all about: they're trying to sell you a record which makes a PROFIT for them. If you're a male, it's a guide on How To Seduce The Hip Chick: 1) dig her groovy things, 2) offer her a joint, 3) whip out this new album (she "had not even realized that the album had been released") to be one-up on her in the hipper-than-thou game.

See how elements have more than one function. Not only is offering her a joint part of the seduction, it's also meant to let you know the record company is in favor of legalizing marijuana which is supposed to equal: they're on your side, so therefore, they aren't exploiting you like the big bad Establishment, right? Of course the record company doesn't tell you that there's also, in the objective world, a record FACTORY where human beings work 9-5 at probably boring jobs for a living.

Hip advertising is merely advertising (and advertising is part of making PROFIT). The hip ad likes to pretend it isn't advertising, but it's quickly seen that it contains all the elements of straight advertising. Look at what this pot-opera is centrally doing. The ad preys on the misery of this woman (suggesting: is this your situation too?) in order to suggest that its product is an indispensable part of the solution to her problem. Of course, maybe it doesn't do the whole job, but then there's the grocery boy left over, and presumably, a few inches off the page (certainly near enough to your favorite masturbatory fantasy, run, don't walk), he has his own, presumably, male chauvinist, ideas of what's going on. Or, Amy can easily be translated into a middle class woman listening to Guy Lombardo, getting ready to sew those curtains she bought at Simpson-Sears. Only the objects have been changed to protect the capitalists.

The thing about capitalist advertising is its adaptability to changing circumstances. It isn't hard to project this ad a couple months into the future: "Amy Foster felt pretty relaxed once she got home to the Women's Commune after an afternoon of exposing some male chauvinists." Any image can be capitalized on. The record companies are allowed to say 'fuck' in their promotion literature now.

Well, you've more than got the point by now. Two points extra for anyone who noticed that the guy who jilted Amy is part of the managerial class in a hippie capitalist clothes establishment. Of course, the ending of the ad is too much: instead of the individualist-escapist solution of heading north suggested earlier (without making a point of how these escapes are only possible if you own Chevy campers and have bread for stereos), she can groove on night-time L.A., as though the whole thing were taking place in a bygone pre-pollutionist era (or is the 'indigo' sky a chemical result partly achieved by the Reprise factory smokestacks).

Why 'Fuck Ramparts' whose editorial position is anti-capitalist? Here, I mean, don't throw stones you wouldn't throw at yourself, so fuck us too, when we have to resort to supporting this exploitative promotion to publish radical magazines and newspapers. The problem isn't a simple one, but the solution is obvious, whether or not feasible: the radical press must sever ties with capitalist finance (the line that we use their money to promote our revolution doesn't seem to me particularly credible). The sacrifice required to sever ties with capitalism may be one, that, given our level of consciousness, we may not be prepared to make yet.

RIOT STICKS FOR WORKERS TOO

BY ALDERMAN HARRY RANKIN
COMMITTEE OF PROGRESSIVE ELECTORS

The three foot long riot sticks demanded by chief constable John Fisk and illegally authorized by Mayor Tom Campbell are not intended for public protection. Protection equipment consists of items like riot helmets, face shields and neck guards. Three foot long riot sticks are to break heads with. And they're aimed at intimidating not only dissenting youths protesting the criminal war being waged by the U.S. in Vietnam. They are also intended for use against unemployed groups demonstrating for jobs and against trade union picket lines.

Mayor Campbell knowingly overstepped his powers when he went behind Council's back on May 15 and secretly instructed chief constable Fisk to order riot sticks before Council had authorized them. His public announcement of his action weeks later was not only grandstanding for headlines, although he successfully achieved this. It has ulterior political motives — it was a provocative act aimed at inciting and encouraging those bigoted elements in our community who hate all youthful dissent, who hate labor unions, who label all criticism of the Establishment as "Commie-inspired."

We have had no incidents in Vancouver warranting the use of three foot riot sticks.

As for the May 8 youth demonstration in front of the city police station, chief constable Fisk informed the board of police commissioners that "dispersement action was taken by the police and this without injury to citizens or police. Why then this sudden haste to get riot sticks?"

Chief Constable Fisk also informed the board that earlier the protest group "moved to the Burrard Building, where the doors to the office of the U.S. Consulate were forced and an American flag stolen and subsequently burned on Georgia Street." Fisk also used this incident as a reason for renewing his demand for riot sticks.

But Fisk hasn't explained why he didn't order the police to guard the door of the U.S. Embassy and prevent it from being broken down. Not a few people have voiced the suspicion that this demonstration was allowed to continue because some people wanted arguments to use against anti-war demonstrators and for the acquisition of riot sticks.

Three foot long sticks won't silence dissent or prevent strikes or stop picket lines. The right to dissent, to assemble and demonstrate can't be limited by police clubs.

The vast majority of those who demonstrate and parade in our city do so peacefully. The actions of a small minority of ultra left elements who provoke incidents can't be used as an excuse to take away the democratic rights of all.

The social ills of our society — war, poverty, unemployment, inequality, discrimination — must be protested if they are to be changed.

Dear Folks —

For those of you in a city space who wonder if you can make it in a more natural environment, our commune is proof that it CAN be done. Three months ago, we were mostly cosmopolitan types with a lot of city hangups. Very few of us knew anything about gardening, much less about getting along in the woods. We did know what we wanted to do — a people, family love trip. And fortunately, we all knew each other fairly well.

Faith in God and a deep love and respect for other people had paid off. There have been a lot of heavies and we lost a few initial members, who we hope will be back. But our group is much stronger than ever before. Faced with the day to day realities of chopping wood, heating water, washing diapers and feeding ourselves, our outlook is becoming less idealistic and more practical. But there is still time for making music, painting pictures, writing books, and having birthday parties.

Our financial situation is best described as — irregular. But somehow the bread always manages to come through. We have learned the best places to buy supplies in bulk quantities at cheap rates. Not much gets wasted.

Our recipe for a successful commune: start with a dream, add some children, a little hard work, a lot of love, some antibiotic pills, and blessings from Jesus. The end result is a little heavy, but good.

By the way — if you have any Mason jars for canning — we sure need them. Send a message to the Straight office and we'll get in touch.

Love and good fortune —
Sandy and Others

Hi! It's the P.X. Ranch again. Does anyone know of someplace where we could get two goats. One goat for the P.X. Ranchers Corral and one for a new commune just getting under way. The new commune has a week old baby so they need to have milk.

Everything is going pretty smoothly here except that there's a lot of people here.

Well adios for now. Happy Trails.

Livestock, of almost any kind, can be purchased at Chapman's Auction Mart (Yale Rd. W. on the Old Highway) in Chilliwack on Fridays. Household goods and crafts can be picked up on Saturday. It is best to bring a lunch and make a day of it.

If you are planning to take off into the wilderness in an attempt to find whatever it is that you want to find, it might be wise for you to pick up a Topographical map, of the area you intend to do your finding in, from the Department of Land and Forest (each map costs a dollar).

These maps are finely detailed and excellent for tentatively locating areas which may be potential sites

Rumour has it — believe it or not — that the RCMP and Canadian Army are engaged in a systematic search of any areas where freaks have been reported. It seems they are looking for the locations of guerilla training camps and hideouts.

The reports, I have, come from people who have been staying in isolated communes up the Coast. If any one has more information to bear out or squash this rumour, I would appreciate it AS SOON AS POSSIBLE.

I have a truck, tools, two rifles, etc. and would like to leave them with a responsible commune for the summer. I'm going to be in Northern B.C. or Alberta and would like to have periodic access to some of my equipment but I can't keep it all with me. If you can help leave a message or phone number with Joan 738-5620.

The following leaflet might be of interest to some readers:

INVITATION I.C.

For tens of millions of Americans, the technology of capitalism has become, in fact, a monster which now dominates the very texture of their lives. The victory of this anti-human technology has produced a people frightened by the world, unsure of their own worth, anxiously buying emotional security through the accumulation of material objects. Their own culture has impressed on them that unless their physical appearance and their values match those of the T.V. commercial, they are incomplete people. The owners and operators of the mass media have mastered the techniques of personality manipulation and motivation. They utilize all the weapons of psychology warfare — fear, distrust, self-flagellation, guilt, etc. — for the purpose of selling their products and making profits. And now the American people have become prisoner in their own land. Most are unaware of their imprisonment or that the creeping entropy which is engulfing them is itself part of the process which has dulled their minds and senses to the world that they live in. Wealth and material satisfaction have not bought personal fulfillment or happiness to the American people instead only opiates to cover the pain. If you have come this far down the road to reality we can at last dispense with the luxury of illusion. It is just impossible to change the society from within! We are the most wonderful country in the world if the reason for life is to GUZZLE and GORGE to one's heart's content.

When the primary motive in production is profit rather than use and need, what can be said for the society that would allow this?

Individualism should subside. The idea of a society of individuals where each person shuts himself up in his own subjectivity, and whose only wealth (really) is individual thought. This is false! Brothers, sisters, friends are real words — our society uses lip service only to these words. Because of this my brother is my purse, morality is bought and sold. My friend is part of my scheme for getting ahead. Look out for yourself — as a motto is as immoral as the capitalism system itself. The interest of one must be the interest of all. One answer is an alternate society where like-minded people would be able to come together without being harassed by the man. I am thinking of intentional communities (read I.C.) and most definitely Walden II oriented. There are some I.C. in existence at the present time. The most aware magazine on I.C. is put out by the Starr King Center, 2441 Le Conte Avenue, Berkeley, California 94709, called "The Modern Utopian". The ultimate of I.C. should be the building of a community without the domination or the exploitation of man by man. Where men can determine their own way of living, their own needs, their own way of satisfying and developing these needs and so exist as free men. As a small I.C. this can be achieved: The min. biological needs — adequate food, shelter, clothes and medical are really not that hard to solve. Freedom from threat of an arbitrary death in war, real friendship, recreation, leisure, and freedom from drudgery type of labor may also be solved by determined people. A culture without destructive myths or superstitions, a culture where sex is experienced as delight and used as a fine means of communication, where each person is not threatened if he or she does not "CONFORM!" The only criterion for man's social behavior would be his concern for others, their happiness. Everything else not associated with love of mankind is more or less disguised ambitious aspiration: egoism dissolved in fine words.

I and others do have ideas where an how to start I.C. and would love to hear your ideas also. May we share together?

ALCATRAZ

JULY 5th RALLY

San Francisco stands to gain a National Park and all the income from such a tourist attraction if the Native Americans occupying Alcatraz Island are removed by Federal storm troopers from the Coast Guard. On June 10, concerned people from the Solidarity with Alcatraz Committee applied to San Francisco for a permit to hold a rally on the Marina Green. Five days later it was denied. (a massive demonstration will be held on July 5 to show the repressive forces of San Francisco and the Federal government that all people support the Native Americans in their struggle for self determination.

The rally will take place on July 5 at 1 P.M., either at Marina Green or Aquatic Park. Indians from Pit River, the Fort Lawton Movement, and Fishing Rights Movement in Washington and Oregon will speak. Entertainment will include Buffy Ste. Marie, tribal dance groups and Native American singers. Further details as to location will be released as the San Francisco Pig Department makes them known to us.

If you can't come to San Francisco, show your solidarity with your Native American sisters and brothers by any means necessary.

Much needed money may be sent directly to the Alcatraz Indians at:

THE PARTY

The Life of The Party

Come to the Party in Stanley Park this coming Saturday and Sunday.

The Party is not just a free festival run by youth. It has been planned by the Vancouver Liberation Front and is an attempt to begin building a revolutionary youth society.

The Party is an alternative to high cost rock festivals that exploit youth. Phil Ochs is coming. And groups such as Django, Tomorrow's Eyes, Seeds of Time, Motherhood, Uncle Smug, Black Blues Band, United Empire Loyalists, High Flying Bird, Subterranean Fire, Floom, Strange Movies, and Stoney Plain have all agreed to play.

The Party is also an attempt by youth to control their own lives and their own culture. For this reason workshops on ecology, basic rights, organizing, woman's liberation and survival skills are an important part of the Party.

Because the Party is illegal, there may be an attempt to close it down. For this reason the VLF has suggested that people come to the Party in tribes of six or more people. Or once there try and get a tribe together. The general approach suggested is to not be a crowd of individuals but different tribes doing things together, protecting and helping each other.

The Party is going to take place on Ceperley Park and Second Beach (See Map). The music and stage will be in Ceperley Park the site of the first Be-In in 1967. Movies will be shown by the old willow trees in the park. To one side of the stage will be the VLF tent and Switchboard to handle information and communication. On the other side of the road towards the beach there will be survival workshops and concessions.

The Party starts Saturday afternoon. VLF wants people to come to rallying points outside the park at about 12:30. One is at the Court House, the other by the sundial at English Bay.

The reasons for this are simple. The cops may try and stop people from entering and setting up the Party. This would be easy to do if people straggle in individually. But a lot harder if they go to the Party as a group. And if there are no hassles the group would already be together and could start building the Party as soon as it goes to the park.

Or the cops may try to hassle people once they are inside the park. This too would be a lot harder to do if people were together in tribes. Then they could protect and keep track of each other.

The Party won't be highly structured. The musicians won't be held to playing sets. They will do what they want. Several different groups may play together. The musicians will work out among themselves how they want to play.

During the Party communications and messages should go through the VLF tent and Switchboard. Messages will be announced from the stage between playing times. But people should use the Switchboard rather than trying to approach the stage.

Before the Party people can get information or offer assistance by phoning the VLF Switchboard number 874-3661.

The VLF tent will also keep track of activities at the workshops. Other groups can set up workshops and rap with people. These too will be announced through the VLF tent.

If you plan to stay the night bring a tent or at least a sleeping bag. Bring a sweater. But don't worry about sleeping. The bands are planning to play all Saturday night. If you want a fire on the beach bring firewood. Don't destroy the Park.

All sorts of people will probably come in and set up concessions. Some of these are bound to be rip offs. At a people's party goods should sell at a minimum profit. If people feel they are being ripped off by a concession, they should get together, approach the vendor and work out a fair price. If the vendor insists on ripping people off, he can be asked to leave. Or his goods can be declared communal and redistributed.

And on one type of ripoff in particular. There will be a regular dope report from the workshops. If you get burned (cheated) tell people with bullhorns what the person who sold you the stuff looked like. Collectively, we can make sure that pushers of bad acid, mescaline or whatever don't burn more of our sisters and brothers.

The politics of the Party are collective. People coming together in groups to help and protect each other. The workshops are intended to equip people with the skills and knowledge necessary for liberation and survival.

*ECOLOGY WORKSHOP - They will organize a task force of people at the Party to keep the park clean. They will have garbage bags and sticks with nails to pick things up.

Around the ecology tent there will also be rap sessions on pollution and a revolutionary approach to ecology.

*MUSIC WORKSHOP - This workshop will centre around the people from the groups that are playing

TO LOVE WE MUST LIVE

Why the Party? How is it different from other rock festivals? And why?

The youth culture developed in the last decade has shaken the world. It is important to know why and what this really means.

The youth culture was pure and simple. Its ideals were love and peace. And these ideals were displayed openly and boldly. We sang them in our songs and showed them in our art and spoke about them in our language. We even tried to live them.

And society would not tolerate us. We were a threat to the phoney values it worships and the ruthless system it serves.

We found strength, however, in being together with each other; with our brothers and sisters. We developed new life styles. We lived, ate and slept together. We sang songs to each other. And we tried to show the world.

We found many obstacles in our path. People are apart. They are separated by gaps of race, religion, sex, nationality, age, education, and authority. We had to recognize this, and we DO now recognize this. We know that we are not together, and that until we are, our ideals will remain hopeless dreams. We must understand why we are apart, and struggle to break the barriers between us.

TO LIVE WE MUST SURVIVE

Survival means getting together and staying together. It means becoming aware of our power, and collectively learning the skills we need to defend ourselves and our culture from pig repression and capitalist rip-off. We have to be strong, and learn to feed and care for ourselves.

The Party is a way of getting together and will be a place for learning skills. We know there may be trouble caused by those who hate our lifestyle and rip-off our culture, but we will not give up the discoveries we have made together, nor will we pay to have what we've already got or let others do what we can do ourselves, free.

We'll hear our music publicly, in the sun, whether it freaks out the parks board or not.

We'll teach each other medical, legal, self defense and other skills, whether the pigs dig it or not.

We'll protect our culture from rip offs. We'll do it for free, and we should be willing to fight any mother-fucker who tries to stop us.

We are a revolutionary culture. Over the years what began as a simple revolt against the fucked up values of North Amerika has become a movement with its own creations, its own ideas, its own lifestyle.

From the bullshit sounds of Dean Martin and Herb Alpert we found the Rolling Stones, B.B. King, and Jimi Hendrix.

Because we couldn't relate to the bullshit jobs with plastic people in plastic offices, we learned how to live cheap, without working or working as little as possible on meaningless jobs.

Because we saw through the money myth and the capitalist bullshit about how you have to rip off your brothers and sisters to live, we learned how to live collectively, and to take care of one another for free, with no strings attached.

And out of all those experiences we learned that all the wars and hatred that tear the world apart and keep people from getting together, aren't necessary. We struggled with living out lives based on love and peace.

This was the revolutionary culture we created in the midst of dying, ugly, death dealing North Amerika.

TO SURVIVE WE MUST FIGHT

Our culture was revolutionary. Its success and continuation meant the destruction of capitalism. The ruling class, then, had to defer the bomb. It tried to co-opt youth culture - it tried to buy our culture. Now they try to sell it back to us.

We sang songs TO and FOR each other. Now we are expected to pay to hear a rock idol perform AT us. We had original and expressive clothing. Now the capitalists try to sell us poor imitations of our original style. We developed a distinctive language. Now, even Richard Nixon can talk "hip talk".

We smoked dope and got busted. We got angry and were put down. We sought peace, but were forced to support war.

But our previous experiences helped us. Our collective life-styles allowed us to be many times as effective and powerful as our previous individual life-styles. There are blocks, such as racism and chauvinism to our getting together, but we must struggle to overcome.

We now recognize the true nature of the repressive pig-nation. We know we cannot be free in it. We know we cannot co-exist with it. We must bring the mother-fucker down. Peace signs have been replaced by fists. Peace marches have been replaced by people actively supporting liberation struggles. Confrontations predominate as demonstrations prove futile.

But our motivations are still the same. We seek peace. But it must be an active peace, a peace where the people are free, not enslaved. Peace is not just the absence of war. And we are motivated by love. Love is that quality which makes the happiness of another essential to my own. I cannot ignore my brother when he is being fucked over. I cannot feel free while he is oppressed. I cannot be satisfied while he is hungry. For my sake, as well as his, I must fight. And I must not stop until the last human is free; until the last pig is on Old MacDonald's Liberated Farm.

The capitalist is big. His pigs are tough. His system is powerful. His technology unsurpassed. But he does not have the people. The people - those millions of exploited and oppressed - will tear the state apparatus down to the last brick. With all their money, capitalists will be unable to defeat all the people united in common struggle.

Power is ours. But we must first seize it. Stanley Park and the Party is a step in that direction. To revolutionary youth this can only be considered the beginning.

We will struggle together and we will work together. We will enjoy the culture and we will dig the presence of our brothers and sisters. At the Party, we will be free. Free to love. Free to control our living situation. The Party will, most of all, be fun. It is the place where love and peace are legal - where WE are legal. But all this can happen only if we are prepared to work, struggle, and fight together for it. We will not be separated from each other.

The struggle to create and maintain our culture will be long and harsh. But we are together. We are the people and we will win.

ALL POWER TO THE PEOPLE!

Cool readers, not yet uptight about irradiation and/or incineration — this column is for you.

RADIOACTIVES WASTES

"A single 1,000,000-kilowatt reactor installation (Ed. note: A utility company can order this popular size from General Electric or Westinghouse) after a year of operation contains more radioactive strontium, cesium, and iodine than was released in all the nuclear weapons tests conducted in the world until the present."

— from "The Careless Atom" by Sheldon Novick (Houghton Mifflin Company, 1969)

"The longer lived fission-product radionuclides, such as strontium 90, cobalt 60, cesium 137, and krypton 85 and nuclei from the metal fuel element cladding... present the principal problem. Activity levels in the liquid may be as great as SEVERAL THOUSAND Curies per gallon... Typical exposure limits for human whole body doses are of the order of microcuries — MILLIONTHS OF A CURIE."

— From "Radioactive Waste from Reactors — the Problem That Won't Go Away by Joel A. Snow ("Scientist and Citizen, May 1967)

"A single gallon would be enough to threaten the health of several million people if it were not encased in concrete and steel, artificially cooled, and buried. The time required for the longest lived isotopes to decay to safe levels is 1,000 - 1,500 years. NINE CASES OF TANK FAILURE have been reported to date due to corrosion and failure of welded seams."

— from "The Myth of the Peaceful Atom by Curtis and Hogan (Natural History Magazine, March 1969)

RIGHT OFF: The "population bomb" is an explosive, if not a nuclear issue. What is the Pope waiting for — immaculate contraception?

will have repercussions all over the world. Japan has just dropped the old policy of controlling the birth rate. The government is actively encouraging people to have large families again. It's afraid that the labour force will die out because of stringent birth control measures, and the government must ensure that it has the population to support the production and consumption race they are having with the U.S. They hope to have the second largest Gross National Product per capita by the end of this century.

So now in this small country, with the highest population density in the world, the government is going to promote births, with all the problems it will bring. All in order to achieve a position of great wealth and power. (Note: B.C. will serve Japan as a major source of raw materials for this expansion. Dr. Ittis compared this new birth policy with Hitler's before he led Germany into its war for 'lebensraum'. Ittis also said that this policy may well lead to a massive war for space in Asia. This view is backed up by present U.S. activity in the area, both open and undercover, and the fact that the U.S. has just agreed to the rearming of Japan — the first time Japan will have arms since WW II.)

The population problem is an obvious problem and we're all connected to it, locked in as we are within the spaceship.

Another problem is war — nuclear war. The ultimate degradation of our environment. As you know, trees, which are very sensitive, can take about 150 roentgens of radiation — that will kill them. Human beings can take about 600 roentgens. But you know what cockroaches can take? About 150,000 roentgens. So the cockroaches will inherit the earth — not the meek.

It is hard to relate to nuclear war. It is terribly hard to find a way to stop the mad arms race and the proliferation of nuclear weapons. What can one person do when anybody who has a nuclear reactor operating for ten years can make clandestine atom bombs? I could make an atom bomb if I had enough plutonium 239. How are we going to control this?

Here's another case of a mad, insane growth which is not under control and which inevitably will explode — by accident or madness.

The third great problem is the environmental destruction now reaching critical levels in some places. This is also a global problem — the first principals of ecology is that life is indivisible. And we perceive so little of what is happening. We perceive dirty water, we perceive our own coughs, we even perceive statistics when we know that respiratory disease is going up at roughly the same rate as air pollution in big cities. But it's very hard for us to see what's happening on a global scale, which is most terrifying of all.

There are at least 500,000 new chemicals in our environment and virtually none of them have had their longterm chronic or degenerative effects measured. We just don't know what they are doing or will do — alone or in combination.

We don't even know what's happening with DDT. And HALF of all the DDT that has ever been used since its invention never even hit the ground. It's floating in the atmosphere — falling out like radioactivity, according to local climate and weather changes. (Note: high DDT concentrations have been linked to sterility in birds. And already, B.C. tests on mother's milk have shown DDT levels that are considered too dangerous for food by health authorities.)

So we have no idea of the danger of all these things that we are loading into the atmosphere, the lithosphere, the hydrosphere. What we do know is that we can soon expect an incredible rise in environmental disease. But what is more frightening is that for the first time in the measured history of civilization we are upsetting certain natural balances that have sustained life for 400 million years. These balances, that have provided all our needs — oxygen, temperature requirements and so on — are for the first time being tipped over.

This is a collective, global threat. It transcends all other threats because no existing ideological struggle can have a winner. Battles can be won temporarily, but NOBODY can win this war. And even now we're getting measurements that show we are moving inexorably towards major changes in world climate which could profoundly change human life, if not end it.

So there are three problems. But the other, which we should never, never forget, is the maldistribution of health and wealth. I am often struck that many people have exclusive issues, or exclusive strategies and they forget that fact that we live in a world of cruelty and injustice, poverty and hate — this is an environmental problem. We must think in terms of TOTAL environment if we are to solve any problems at all.

If we are to survive, we must control growth — all kinds of growth. And recycle and use our energy and resources in a very creative way. We must create a new economics, a new politics.

I am not a doom theorist, incidentally. Because all over the world people are increasing their awareness, and getting involved on a local level in solving the problems I've listed. The key lies in getting together. (Dr. Knelman then went on to suggest that all those present join SPEC, including members of the audience like the Vancouver Liberation Front people. He suggested that they join and change it to what they wanted it to be. Calculating on his suggestion that each member of SPEC get a new member every month, it would seem that over 36 million Canadians would belong within a year. Which would indicate a lot of enthusiasm in a population of 20 million.)

Can you imagine how powerful that would be, if we could all agree on how to restructure society so that our economic and political systems served human welfare through human love? We could do it! We do have the power — in our brains, in our hearts, in our pockets, in our vote — to change the course for man. And the people who start with the position that it's impossible, that the system is too strong — you are assuring disaster.

INTERVIEW WITH "HIJACKERS"

WE HAVE CARRIED OUT A REVOLUTIONARY MILITARY ACTION AGAINST IMPERIALISM AND BALAGUER'S PUPPET REGIME — HOLD THE U.S. GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES OF CIA BANDS AGAINST CUBA — STATEMENTS BY THE MEMBERS OF THE DOMINICAN RESISTANCE COMMANDO ON THE WAVE OF CRIMES PERPETRATED DURING THE CAMPAIGN FOR THE REELECTION FARCE IN THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Seven members of the Central Commando of Resistance of the Dominican Republic arrived at Jose Marti International Airport in Havana on May 13 from Santiago de Cuba, where they had landed aboard a plane of the Dutch West Indies Airlines (ALM) which was diverted to Cuba while on a schedule flight between Santo Domingo and Curacao.

The young revolutionaries are Victor Veloz de los Santos, Miguel Martinez Rincon, Camilo Ventura, Miguel Angel Nina, Arsenio de los Santos Veloz, Francisco Antonio Gonzalez and Enrique Nunez Frias. In a meeting with newspapermen they said that the main reason for their armed action was to denounce before the whole world the proimperialist regime of Joaquin Balaguer and U.S. intervention in the Dominican Republic, on the eve of the electoral farce scheduled for Saturday, May 16.

The action was named Julian Augusto Parahoy, after one of their comrades in struggle who was recently murdered.

The young Dominican revolutionaries told of the lack of guarantees for human life in that country, adding that the regime does not respect the rights of political prisoners or those who simply oppose the reelection, stating that these persons are subjected to torture and jailed without being tried. The young revolutionaries emphasized that obtaining political asylum amidst a climate of repression and death is practically impossible.

The Central Commando of Resistance, which carries on its struggle in the underground in the Dominican Republic, is made up of students, workers, peasants and other progressive elements determined to carry on the revolutionary struggle.

The young revolutionaries were in complete agreement in pointing out that the political situation in their country is one of increasing violence and repression. They said that, while the candidates of the diverse politicking parties go around the various cities looking for votes, dozens of students, workers and others who oppose the regime are murdered in the streets or thrown into prison and tortured.

When asked about the people's opinion of one or another candidate, all seven agreed that none of those politicians represent the will of the people or the legitimate aspirations of Dominicans. However they pointed out that, thanks to the support given Balaguer by Yankee imperialism and the brutal repression by Balaguer's thugs against any demonstration repudiating his regime, he is the candidate most likely to win in the reelection farce.

De los Santos said, "That will mean not a victory for Balaguer, but rather the continuation of a long struggle, which, already begun, will gather in strength. It is for that struggle that the Dominican people are preparing today, for the people know that the possibility of a new Yankee invasion exists. It is real, but we are not afraid of it, and there are old debts to be settled that date back to the interventions of 1916 and 1965."

The young revolutionaries told of various clashes with the police, who could not stop the people from parading and gathering on April 24 and April 28 to pay homage to their martyrs on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the Yankee aggression which was so courageously fought off by the people headed by Colonel Francisco Caamano. "Despite all the spectacular measures of security and repression," said Miguel Angel Nina, a university student, "the people poured out into the streets." Only a few days away from the electoral farce — that has the blessing of the U.S. Ambassador in the Dominican Republic and the Washington Government — the young revolutionaries say that the diversion of the airliner has contributed to the demoralization of the people and put Balaguer and his henchmen in a ridiculous position.

Speaking of what Balaguer has described as "uncontrollable forces," Miguel Martinez Rincon pointed out, "Those ultrareactionary elements persecute and murder those who oppose Balaguer, and they have Balaguer's full support."

Martinez also said that a little over a week ago, when a pro-Balaguer campaign caravan made up of those elements was passing by a humble neighborhood called Guachupita and cries of "Balaguer, murderer!" were heard, the group opened fire, killing a 7 year-old child.

In reference to the sinking of the two Cuban fishing boats and the kidnapping, the Dominican revolutionaries emphasized the responsibility for the U.S. Government in these actions.

Victor Veloz de los Santos commented, "The imperialists really hate the Cuban Revolution. That's why they support such actions, because, without that support, the counter-revolutionaries wouldn't be able to do anything at all."

"The Yankees are the ones who are supplying those cowards with weapons, and the whole thing was planned by Nixon," Miguel A. Nina emphasized. The group of revolutionaries took advantage of the subject under discussion to speak of the support that Balaguer has been giving to Cuban counterrevolutionaries for many years and of his complicity with imperialism in all such acts of aggression. They pointed out that the political adviser of the Dominican President is Santiago Rey Pernas, who was Minister of the Interior in the Batista regime.

Speaking of this new imperialist aggression against Cuba, Enrique Nunez Frias — who was imprisoned for four months and subjected to torture in the La Victoria jail, where he went on a hunger strike for 31 days — said, "The cowardly, aggressive nature of the Yankees is well known in my country."

In answer to questions as to their future plans, the seven revolutionaries said that they wanted to cut cane together with the Cuban people in this harvest. Arsenio de los Santos said "The Yankees want to place obstacles in the way of the harvest and the Revolution's economic plans, but they will fail in that, too."

HIP POCRATES

Copyright, 1970 by Eugene Schoenfeld, M.D.

"Dear Dr. Hip Pocrates:

I have been smoking marijuana with a friend of mine (not steadily) for four years. We both suffer from eye irritation every time we smoke it. This irritation seems serious enough (extremely red, swollen and sensitive to light) to raise the question of whether or not it is possible to be allergic to marijuana smoke, or if it is a side effect occurring to a few unfortunate users.

Only a few of the many people we know that smoke marijuana seem to reach the point of eye irritation that we do. Since I have gotten contact lenses, about two years ago, it has become increasingly unbearable. My friend does not wear contact lenses yet her eyes become just as badly irritated.

When we use eye drops, it gives a very temporary relief of perhaps 30 seconds, and it must be reapplied every five minutes. It's not very convenient, to put it mildly.

Rather than give up the pleasure of smoking dope, is there any prevention; cure or possibility of this being an allergy?"

ANSWER: Marijuana commonly causes red eyes due to a widening of blood vessels in the white of the eyes. The severe symptoms you describe are unusual but could be caused by this effect of marijuana. Allergy to marijuana is another possibility but you'd probably have other symptoms such as wheezing or sneezing.

See your family physician or an ophthalmologist if you think they can dig your problem without freaking. Or call the nearest Free Clinic and be seen there or by a member of the volunteer staff. But do not use contact lenses over irritated eyes.

Perhaps it won't be long before people can freely tell all their problems to physicians. The Student A.M.A., formerly a puppet organization, has recently endorsed many proposals directly contrary to the views of the entrenched medical establishment.

At their annual meeting in Philadelphia the Student A.M.A. passed proposals including these:

"That S.A.M.A. go on record supporting the view that problems of drug abuse are not primarily criminal problems but are health problems with legal implications, and as such must be dealt with by health professionals."

"That S.A.M.A. endorse that the use of cannabis be governed by laws similar to those already existing pertaining to the use of alcohol."

"That S.A.M.A. endorse the concept of methadone programs and other programs for the legal distribution by licensed medical centers at minimum costs of narcotic drug substitutes for the chronic maintenance of addicted persons."

The medical students also recommended that all U.S. medical schools have at least 20% of their classes filled by minority members by the 1975-76 academic year.

Further evidence of progress — the S.A.M.A. resolutions were prominently featured in the A.M.A. news.

But other inanities continue. Senator Dodd has attempted to blame the My Lai massacre on the use of drugs since otherwise American soldiers couldn't murder women and children in the style of the Nazis, could they?

And the June 16th issue of LOOK has an article called "Does our Army fight on drugs?" by Joel Kaplan, M.D., formerly a major in Vietnam. Describing the Vietnam variety of marijuana, Dr. Kaplan says "Patients told me that pot in Vietnam produces a trip like LSD. It is a hallucinogen, and they said that, depending on the stress they were under, they often became angry, upset and/or paranoid."

It's easy to understand one could become "angry, upset and/or paranoid" in Vietnam stoned or not. But drawing conclusions about marijuana in this manner is like studying the effects of alcohol using a sample of skid row bums. Obviously very few people who use alcohol wind up on skid row.

Later in the article Dr. Kaplan describes a Green Beret who had smoked marijuana, ingested a barbiturate and injected opium: "He was screaming and trying to fight. I had to give him sedation. He seemed about 6 feet, 2 inches and 200 pounds. The next day, I saw him in the ward; he was 5 feet, 6 inches and 140 pounds."

Some pills make you taller, some make you small...

THE JUST FRIENDS SOCIETY

A PROPOSAL: In our community there are men, women and children who, for any combination of social and/or personal circumstances, have been jailed or have become alcoholics or hard drug addicts and consequently, find themselves essentially alone in a hostile environment.

While there is a network of functioning rehabilitation organizations that is trying to meet the real or imagined needs of these people, it is sadly apparent that a large number of them remain either untouched by or alienated from these establishment services.

Also in our community are healthy, functioning, concerned men, women and young adults who could, on a strictly voluntary and non-profit basis, help their more unfortunate brothers and sisters by involving themselves with them on a PERSONAL ONE-TO-ONE RELATIONSHIP based on sympathetic understanding and practical advice and/or assistance.

This proposal, then, is for the formation of The Just Friends Society, that would, initially, examine the possibilities of opening up the rehabilitation procedures to allow this new concept of friendly individual help and subsequently proceed to the practical application of this concept.

If anyone out there finds this proposal of some merit and would like to participate in an informal meeting, drop a note to Just Friends, c/o Georgia Straight, 56A Powell Street, Vancouver 4. No obligation, no power, political or profit trips. No sex, age, color, creed or appearance limits. Just friends.

DALLAS COMES DOWN ON "NOTES"

LIBERATION News Service

DALLAS, Texas (LNS) — In line with similar actions against underground papers across the country, Dallas is coming down hard and fast against DALLAS NOTES.

The most recent incident supposedly stems from the cover picture of the June 3-16 issue of a nude male leading an anti-mini-skirt protest. Urged on by the "Citizens for a Decent Dallas", the District Attorney and the City Attorney asked that a temporary injunction be issued against NOTES and its editor and publisher, Stoney Burns (nee Burt Stein) on the grounds that "the sale and distribution of such material to minors would cause irreparable injury to (their) morals and general welfare."

NOTES responded by first not showing up at the hearing on June 12 and secondly by presenting a motion to declare Burns a pauper and therefore unable to pay court costs.

On the same day the office received an anonymous telephone call to the effect that there were plans to raid them for dope. Everyone cleared out. They returned to find two men leaving the office. The door had been kicked in, two stereos and records destroyed, a nude painting slashed, and the staff camera stolen.

One member of the staff was arrested in front of the court house when she tried to sell a copy of NOTES to a Dallas County Judge. Burns had earlier in the week been indicted on charges of interfering with police during a civil disturbance April 12.

The latest issue of the paper appeared on June 17. "Citizens for a Decent Dallas" and City councilmen are still wondering what to do about it since the temporary injunction didn't seem to have any effect. The result has been to make NOTES more popular and to get it open support from the establishment press. Obviously the issue here is not the nude picture (nude magazines are regularly distributed in Dallas untouched) but rather, as the Stoney Burns defense case states, "the controversial nature of the newspaper" and the "unorthodox nature of (their) life style."

WTF BREED

Self-avowed Major Tom Campbell has been pulling his diversionary tactics again for the benefit of the community in an effort to widen the schism between the straights and the "others" - meaning us.

Last week the self-seeking son of a tub full of bath-water calmly announced to the straight papers that "O no, I don't mind if the young people want to use Stanley Park for their "Party". No one should need a permit to use our parks."

Well that was last week.

This week I learned from one of my spies in the police department (I have them everywhere) that all leaves and out of town vacations have been cancelled for June 27 and 28, the days of the Party.

Now if this information is correct (and I have no reason to doubt that it isn't) it seems as if this is another effort on the part of this thoroughly unprincipled and unscrupulous mayor to deliberately turn what we have for many years strived to make a peaceful movement into a critical situation that may lead into a violent confrontation.

And I think if this happens, all the energy we have extended will be blown to waste.

We are not ready for a revolution in the classical sense yet and if we are "radicalized" by an onslaught of police terror we can only expect a long, if interminable, period of repression.

T. CAMPBELL IS A HOTBATH

Have no illusions. This man who masquerades as even being a human possesses a wide and incredible charm over the standard citizen and they largely support his ignorant idiocy.

As I have said before I am opposed to violent action and from time to time feel that the radicals in Vancouver who want to pull the community into violent confrontation are prompted by media conditioning from U.S. sources. However, it now appears that Campbell too, or even more so, wants to put Vancouver on the international map of social disturbance. And he wants to make it violent.

With the possible exception that he may be defeated in the fall election, there seems little escape from this trickster of people's attitudes.

Except this curse: Tom Campbell I hope you roast in hell until your rotten heart is nothing more than a small pile of charred embers!

ENGLETHING

And so I pull the plug and let the man gurgle through the drain of my mind.

ART LET HER DO IT ALL

Kids say the darndest things.

Or whose four year old child was it that I heard on the bus the other day happily singing: "Everybody must get stoned!"?

ENGLETHING

The other evening, as I was coursing my way home through the sultry evening air I came upon a man lying on a somewhat recumbent position on the grass. Beside him was a smashed half case of beer, and, to tell the truth, its presence was suggestive of the man's state of stability.

Knowing it would not be long till the paddy wagon arrived to take him to the Darktown Copper's Hotel I asked him if I could assist him on his way.

He quite candidly replied: "Yes, if you wouldn't mind. You see, I'm pretty tight." Well, I helped him up - a burly man in his early forties - and as we began on our merry way in the direction of his abode, He addressed me with the following words: "Say, do you mind if I ask you a few questions?"

"Sure," I answered.

"Tell me. What is a hippie?"

"Aww, come on. I don't want to talk about that." I snapped back, not wanting to get into one of those nebulous and interminable arguments.

The man persisted. "I'm gonna tell you what a hippie is. You know You know what a hippie is? A hippie is a gentleman with long hair."

ENGLETHING

And to continue Big Art Linkletter's drift: Aren't people funny?

Some days ago as I was winding my way through a back alley looking for scraps to make up my daily meal, I chanced upon a door secreted away from general public sight. However embossed in rather brazen lettering above it was the following sign:

WAR AMPUTEES OF CANADA
THE AMPLIGHTER CLUB

ENGLETHING

If you've ever wondered how your name gets on those mailing lists that send out junk advertising please take note that the source for this irritating practice comes from none other than your Canada Post Office.

We received in the mail last week a brochure from the post office offering to sell us a mailing list for the entire Province of British Columbia. The directories, the brochure states, "are compiled by Federal Electoral Districts and contain the names, addresses and occupations of the customers served through the post Offices in each district . . ."

The average directory costs about $5.00

And, unfortunately, after checking with the Registrar of Voters, the practice of using voter's lists is not illegal. Hence more paper used in an ecological rip-off and more junk for your garbage pile.

COME ON - LET'S OOZE...

ENGLETHING

Une Belle Lettre on Hype.

In the past I've often hyped someone or something in this column. Mainly, because I've felt it would be of some interest to you. And here I was about to do it again, until I began to think a bit more about the quantity or thing I was going to hype. As a matter of fact, I began to think how I had been hyped to hype you.

Now to my left is a press release from G.P. Putnam Books announcing the publication of a new book entitled "Mastering Witchcraft": A Practical Guide For Witches, Warlocks & Covens by Paul Huson". Ok so I know there is some current interest in witchcraft and I figure I might as well say something about the book. However as I begin to examine the press release for the reason that I think witchcraft is a bunch of bad human shit in the first place) I began to see the most extraordinary inconsistencies in the text of the copy. Just one example:

"- In 1969 tickets to the Broadway show "Hair" became scarce; and when people asked the inevitable question, "What are you", you knew to answer according to your astrological sign and not your ancestry."

Now that's Part 1. After that I came to a section in the copy called ABOUT THE AUTHOR:

"Paul Huson is of English birth and one of his Scottish ancestors, Alice Huson, was hanged as a witch in the seventeenth century. Mr Huson's wide variety of work experience includes the theatre, television, motion pictures, Tarot card designing and painting . . ."

And what's his sign? No mention of it. But the more I think of it, I figure that someone has tried to hype me with a bunch of manshit so I'll hype you to buy what I now have a hunch is nothing another incompetent publication designed to capitalize on the popular whims of society.

In other words, if you're into witchcraft, you're most likely there because the publicity media has put you there and you'd better examine your position before you arrive at any certainties concerning your interests.

While covering a Supreme Court case for the Straight this week it stunned ol' Engledink's heart to witness the creep, crawly servility of most lawyers present as they approached the presiding justice with their petitions.

They just come oozing up slowly, like a glob of reluctant sperm.

There is now a popular movement in California to press for the enactment of a similar law to that recently passed in Massachusetts which prohibits any citizen of that state from engaging in any armed conflict which has not been previously declared as a 'war' by the U.S. Congress.

ENGLETHING

Friends of mine who are from northern B.C. and wanted to take in some of the Gastown atmosphere have not yet stopped bitching about the exorbitant prices and rotten entertainment to be found at the Gastown Saloon.

ENGLETHING

On Monday morning of this week, Supreme Court Justice Mr. Wootton granted a two day adjournment to correct a procedural irregularity in Ian Crawford's injunction against the City of Vancouver to prevent them from acquiring and using riot equipment. The injunction stipulates that any equipments recently acquired be returned to the manufacturer's.

According to court and injunction procedures there must be seven 'clear' days between the application for the injunction and it's appearance in court. The injunction was filed on June 15 and, as a consequence, only five 'clear' days had passed (weekends do not count as a 'clear' day).

The attorney for the city of Vancouver appears to be founding his argument on the fact that Ian cannot apply for the injunction because he is not a ratepayer and at this point it looks like a strong argument as there are no precedents of similar legal action taken against a municipal corporation in which the charge was laid by a person other than a ratepayer.

At any rate, the battle will continue on Wednesday, June 24, Keep on hoping.

ENGLEFORE BIRD CLOSURE

Well, folks, this is the end of this weeks column and it sounds as if the end of peaceful demonstration in this city has come. It would have been nice if we could have got through to City Council, but we didn't and it looks like we may be in for hard times.

They say this is the dawning of a new age.

Well if it is,

PICKIN' & GRINNIN'. . . A fresh batch of nonsense has arrived on my desk since this time last week - most of it less than interesting, some of it blatant, but none of it more absurd than a press release (and album) signifying another artistic (gawd) triumph for our fave redneck, Glen Campbell, Yes, folks, its dear lovable Glenn out to make a few more bucks by supporting the illusions of missions, yes millions, of dour dejected american dreams. This time the big blond stud is going it on his own (no John Wayne father-figure) in a new flick called "NORWOOD". And appearing with him again is that symbol of repressed american womanhood, Kim Darby. She's not sexual (Glen would blush too much) but rather, well, yes, you know. . .

Anyway, the PR goes on: "Now, in 'Norwood', Glen has been able to combine his multitudinous musical talents with his burgeoning dramatic abilities in the title role of affable Norwood Pratt, a discharged Marine who figures to be a big-time singing and picture star. In the course of his adventures, Norwood encounters hippies, con men, the world's most perfect midget, a college-educated hen, and, of course, Kim Darby, the charming ingenue. . ."

The whole effort sounds too absurd for words, so I won't write any. But Phil Ochs has put some down: Jack and Jill went up the hill. They were looking for a thrill. But she forgot to take her pill. Gimme my pill, gimme my pill. Through our fantasies we fly. In the prison of our dreams we die. Praying in an apple pie.

THANX. . . for all the cards, letters and telephone calls re my ad for movie and book reviewers. The answers were overwhelming. If you've phoned and I haven't answered yet, don't despair, it's just that there's so many.

CHIMPANIA?. . . With everyone going ape over all the latest Beatle happenings, I thought I'd dig up some info that may or may not amuse you. John and Yoko are doing things again. Buying houses and cars and all that shit. Plus expecting in October. All this time they are in the process of interviewing chimpanzees. Sometimes

Yoko & John

I know how they must feel. Apparently they're thinking of putting together an act, with one chimp on piano and one on drums. This may throw more than a Spaniard in the Plastic Ono works. Remember, John, it's not how write you are, nor is it true that the music you make is equal to the chimps you take BIRTHDAYS. . . For you jazz freaks, here are a few birthdays, past and future; I bet you forgot to send cards, eh? June 17 - Tony Scott; June 23 - George Russell; June 30 - Buddy Rich.

PEOPLE. . . this section (entertainment) is really yours, you know. . . why not become a little more involved? Feedback is really welcome so rap, rap, rap. The answer, babe, is just a dial away.

LOTS A LYRICS. . . This week the Doors get to do it to you. Disregard the obvious - after you've read this listen to the cut - loudly. Then do it again and this time listen to what they're doing together. And remember, they're human just like you and me - got that? They're only people, man.

YOU MAKE ME REAL

(As recorded by the Doors on Elektra Records. Lead sung by Jim Morrison.)

I really want you, really do,
Really need you, baby, God knows I do.
'Cause I'm not real enough without you,
Oh, what can I do!

You make me real,
You make me feel like lovers feel.
You make me throw away mistaken

Make me free, love,
Make me free.

I really want you, really do,
Really need you, baby, really do.
'Cause I'm not real enough without you.
Oh, what can I do!

You make me real,
Only you, baby, have that appeal.
So let me slide inside your tender sunken sea.
Make me free, love,
Make me free.

You gotta roll, baby, roll.
Roll, baby, roll.
You make me real,
Allright!
You make me feel like lovers feel.
You make me throw away mistaken
misery.
Make me free, love,
Make me free, make me free,
You make me free!

- THE MANDRAKE MEMORIAL (Poppy PYS 40,006) -
BY MICHAEL QUIGLEY

The Rolling Stone ad for this album had the headline: "Here's a preview of where music is going." Ignoring the hype that followed, what that means is that Puzzle is an "experimental rock" album. Like Van Dyke Parks' Song Cycle, Zappa's Lumpy Gravy, and Pink Floyd's Ummagumma, it does a little more than dwell on 1-4-5 chord sequences. Also like those albums, it's heavily non-commercial, appealing more to FM listeners.

Although Puzzle is the most interesting album I've heard in the last four months, I still have some reservations about it, concerned mainly with the group's mixing of rock with classical and electronic-sounding music.

Although Mandrake Memorial basically seem to know what they're doing musically, they don't do enough. For the most part, the rock and non-rock music are kept separate, resulting in sort of a sonic schizophrenia. What results is some pedestrian-sounding rock cuts with inconsequential lyrics mixed with "sound pieces" such as the opening Earthfried Prelude, which uses a small classical orchestra, and Kyrie, an intertwining mixture of voices and instruments. There are a few interesting "electronic" effects, but they are unfortunately brief.

As well, compared to Zappa, Mandrake Memorial's compositional skills in the electronic and classical sounding material aren't very imaginative. Like the Romantic-symphonic Moody Blues, MM seems haunted by the stigma of 19th century classical music, as can be heard in their use of lyrical string lines for backing in several spots. Like most classical-tainted rock groups, they've yet to catch up to Penderecki, Xenakis, Boulez, Cage, and Stockhausen.

The album as a whole is subdued, hesitant about breaking away from a rock foundation (sorry about that) as Pink Floyd did brilliantly in Ummagumma. Still, Puzzle is a relief from the AM-oriented garbage that floods today's record market since it doesn't condescend to a commercial level. Though I can't buy Poppy Records' contention just yet that "in the next few months the Mandrake Memorial will become one of the important innovative groups in the rock movement" perhaps their next album will be the deciding one.

REVIEWS

The California Generation or Flat Pepsi

a book review by VIOLET WEATHERSPOON

"Born in London, Jacqueline Briskin lived there until she was ten, when her family moved to Beverly Hills. She admits, 'I went through the Beverly Hills school system in an undistinguished manner, scholastically, and, after two years of prelaw study at UCLA, she left to marry Bert Briskin. They are the parents of three children and live in Bel Air.'"

That excellent person has written a novel called "THE CALIFORNIA GENERATION". It is 570 pages long.

"The California Generation, the children of the Sixties: they're hip but have their hang-ups. Their parents berate them, coerce them, exhibit them, and coincidentally love them. They're the first generation to be raised on smog and Spock, transistorized music and frozen dinners, parental permissiveness and paperback pornies. They're into a lot of trips and some of them are real bummers."

And that particular writing style is consistent throughout each of the 570.

"Los Angeles, 1960: another class of students at California High is getting ready to burst out into the world."

Varooooooooom! Vroooooooooom! Vroooooooooooooooooooooom! Apparently this novel is about "lives...played out against the background of the early Sixties: Kennedy's presidency and assassination, the space program, Watts, student protest, Vietnam."

A serious drawback to this book is that there are no pictures, although the print is quite large.

"California Generation focuses on California, but it is about all the kids who grew up in the Sixties: their problems, their morals, their fears and ideals. It is a big novel of our time, written with incisive compassion, that takes a scorching look at the anatomy of a troubled decade."

The California Generation is a bottle of flat Pepsi.

This book is too silly to be offensive, too much a loser to rate as a "bad-therefore-fun" number. I can't imagine why anyone would want a copy of it but the first one who makes a request of me through the Georgia Straight office, is certainly welcome to mine.

The Poverty Wall & Patterns of Politics

THE POVERTY WALL by Ian Adams, McClelland and Stewart, 154 pages, 2.95 and PATTERNS OF POLITICS by Charles Taylor, McClelland and Stewart, 160 pages, 2.95.

The best first — Ian Adams' POVERTY WALL. Skillfully written, and imminently readable, Adams' personal recollections of life behind the poverty wall are grimly etched.

A denizen of Skid Row and the unemployment queue turned journalist, Adams alternates portraits of Canada's dispossessed (women without men, miners, Indians and Metis, the urban and rural poor), with statistics and statements from government officials, business men, etc.

The irony is savage, the bitterness barely contained.

We sit with Adams in a bleak Newfoundland kitchen talking to a miner who coughs out the last few weeks of a life spent underground. Almost all the local men of the miner's generation are dead or grievously ill with lung cancer obtained in Aluminum Company of Canada's Burin Peninsula flourspar operation. The mine produces $2.25 million in ore annually. The miner's highest wage was $2.16 an hour. He worked for Alco twenty-seven years.

We travel to Northern Saskatchewan (and folks, the opening of this chapter contains one of the finest descriptions of the prairies I've read in quite a while), to a marginal dirt farm.

The farmer has split, leaving his wife and three kids to make it, (if they make it at all) on welfare. The 10 year-old son has been busted in Saskatoon, and the welfare worker tells the mother she should pull up the only slender roots she has, and move to the city. A fifteen year-old cousin has come to stay with the family. She is pregnant. By her father.

We leave the mother on the back porch with the brooding land, head in work-hardened hands, tears flowing soundlessly between her fingers.

Any federal or provincial programs already established are incompetent, Adams tells us, mainly because the poor have little role in deciding where the money should go. They live at the ass-hole end of a system designed merely to perpetuate, not alleviate their suffering, and their children's suffering.

The cycle of poverty is vicious, a closed system that allows entry, but no exit. Except for the rarely talented individual like Mr. Adams.

And Mr. Adams has at least moved from the ass-hole to the balls of the system. It will be interesting to note where he goes from there. He is angry, a good writer, and he knows whereof he writes. The combination is unforgettable. Dig it.

* * *

Then there is Mr. Charles Taylor. Charlie is an academic par excellence, a politician unrequited, (he was trounced by Trudeau in the '68 Mount Royal riding), and he presents us with his views of Canada's social, economic, and political problems, and the heady NDP solutions. (He is Vice-President of the NDP.)

THE PATTERN OF POLITICS, it would seem, is the sort of work the North American new left is constantly asked to write by the straight media. ("They're great at burning down banks, and smashing windows, but the New Left lacks long-range theoretical answers to the problem.")

Oddly, Taylor quickly dissociates himself from the heart of new left politics with the following statement:

"But is this rebellion really a ground of hope for those on the left? I don't think so. Rather than being an antidote to the sickness of our civilization, the more extreme campus rebellions seem a symptom of it. For they are locked into the same fundamental ideas as the society they combat." p.62

But the real kicker occurs in the next paragraph:

"Our civilization... should be indicted for the shallow utopianism that it inherits from the Enlightenment, the belief that all will be well if we can just effect the right changes in social engineering." p.63

And then it's off and running with Charlie and the NDP for 100 pages of social engineering. If we figure that Ian Adams is shaking the system by the balls, then Charlie Taylor is surely lodged somewhere in the cerebrum.

POLITICS includes doctrinaire and fairly complex analyses of Canada's corporate economic structure, a dissection of what Taylor terms "the politics of consensus," and Taylor's solution to the problems, the key phrase being "the politics of polarization."

The way the good professor sees it, Trudeau rode into office on the politics of consensus by seeming the young, dynamic, representative of a new Canada. But Trudeaumania features only the appearance of change, not the reality. And who can argue with that?

We might also agree with Taylor's criticisms of this country's economy (i.e., "the branch-plant economy," the ripoff of our natural resources, the absurd freedom of corporations to control the entire economy, the prevalence and waste of advertising), but it is hardly original.

In Chapter 5, "Power and Participation," Taylor almost makes it to the heavy stuff. A consumer-oriented economy, he says, leads us into private, and empty acquisitional ego-trips. Where, he asks, have the old institutions and celebrations with common and heart-felt meaning gone to?

Too bad you missed Woodstock, brother.

In short, we feel that Mr. Taylor is providing old answers to the problem.

And one other thing — I heard a story about Charlie that needs retelling, although it is definitely below the professorial belt.

McGill students were holding a border demonstration against the Amchitka tests last October. Mr. Taylor and a couple of other leading NDP professors spoke at a rally on the campus preceding the border actions. They told the group the demonstrators were doing the right thing, they were behind them one hundred per cent, etc., when one girl hollered, "Oh by the way, Professor Taylor, we have room in our car to take you all with us!"

And then followed the old look-at-your-watch-gulp, gee-I'd-love-to-but-very-important-meeting-bullshit-BULLSHIT.

There in my opinion lies the difference between a man like Mr. Adams, and a professor like Mr. Taylor: one writes, and we listen, because he knows what it is to be poor; the other writes and we take issue, because his knowledge of poverty is second hand at best.

Mr. Taylor has yet to put his body where his mouth is. Mr. Adams already has.

Look!!!!!! - Look

BY SAM SLIDE

Whenever I feel sad about the state of the world, I can think with comfort of this month's edition of LOOK magazine. It is a treasure, for it assures me that, if all is not right with the world, it must soon be.

There is a concerned editorial about student rioters. If LOOK cares, and they apparently do, soon it will all be ironed out. Right?

There is an article about a dear lady in Indiana who is trying to help farmers organize into cooperatives. The woman herself, Zita Potts really is as remarkable as the article claims, but the article has a resigned, disinterested air of honest journalism. . . . though that in itself is reassuring.

There is also an article about Germany and another about what defines a Jew — the latter with a cute twist and I just won't tell, so read it yourself.

There is an all American story about a baseball player.

But best of all, Richard Burton has given Elizabeth Taylor the most expensive fur coat in the world, and the pictures are in this month's Look. It cost a hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars and is made of Kojah fur, a kind of obese mink. And they are, neither one of them, apologetic about the coat. Why should they be? They paid for it. He says: In my particular case, and with my particular wife, she's just as excited if you give her a something that costs $3.75 as she is if you give her a million dollar diamond: — both of which I've done." So there.

She says: "Anyway who the hell's business is it?" Exactly.

There are also cartoons, advertising, letters to the editor. . . . a great month for LOOK, a concerned magazine.

Strangely enough, at the cigar store at the corner of Hastings and Carroll they do not sell this magazine. So I guess a few people in that part of town won't see the pictures of Liz cavorting on the beach in a red bikini and the world's most expensive fur coat. Too bad.

published in Newton, Mass., the Boston Globe reports.

"Computers and Automation," oldest magazine in the field of computers and data processing, charges the commission was wrong in concluding Lee Harvey Oswald was the sole assassin.

In a 32-page article, Richard E. Sprague, a computer expert, says that:

The killing was accomplished by at least four gunmen, firing from different locations, and that Oswald was not one of them.

The assassination was the product of a conspiracy involving more than 50 persons, including members of the Dallas Police department and the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

Sprague, president of Personal Data Services, Hartsdale, N.Y., has for six years made an avocation of studying old and new evidence bearing on the assassination.

His charges follow the disclosure that former President Lyndon B. Johnson has lingering doubts that Oswald, the accused assassin, acted alone.

Johnson expressed these doubts during a 13-hour interview with Walter Cronkite for a CBS television special.

The former president apparently had second thoughts about making his doubts public, however, and insisted that CBS delete all references to them from the television tape.

The deletions demanded by Johnson were described by CBS officials as in line with an agreement permitting the former president to review and cut "comments involving national security."

the Sprague article is entitled, "The Assassination of President Kennedy: the Application of Computers to the Photographic Evidence."

PRESIDIO 27 CONVICTION REVERSED

SAN FRANCISCO (LNS) — The conviction of one of the 27 Presidio GIs sentenced to fifteen years in a military stockade was overturned on June 16. The Military Court of Review threw out the conviction of Pvt. Nersey Sood, one of the soldiers involved in a stockade revolt in October 1968.

The reversal is expected to win eventual freedom for all the defendants sentenced for alleged mutiny. The GIs action came as a sit-down protest against terrible prison conditions and the murder of a mentally deranged soldier by a sadistic stockade guard.

CAMPUS COP CONFERENCE

BY TONY TUGWELL

The international convention at the University of Victoria last week was like many other conventions — a mixed business and social affair. In the commons block distributors had set up displays of the latest manufactured items of interest to the people at the convention. And of course the display space had been sold by the organization holding the conference in order to help pay some of the costs. All done on sound capitalist principles.

But there was an additional factor which brought public attention on the conference — if only in Victoria. It was the annual convention of the International Association of College and University Security Directors (IACUSD). Campus cops from across North America met in Victoria for five days last week. And mixed in with displays of spotlights, parking meters, locks and alarms there were shotguns, mace dispensers, a tear gas and smoke generator, riot sticks, helmets and hand guns.

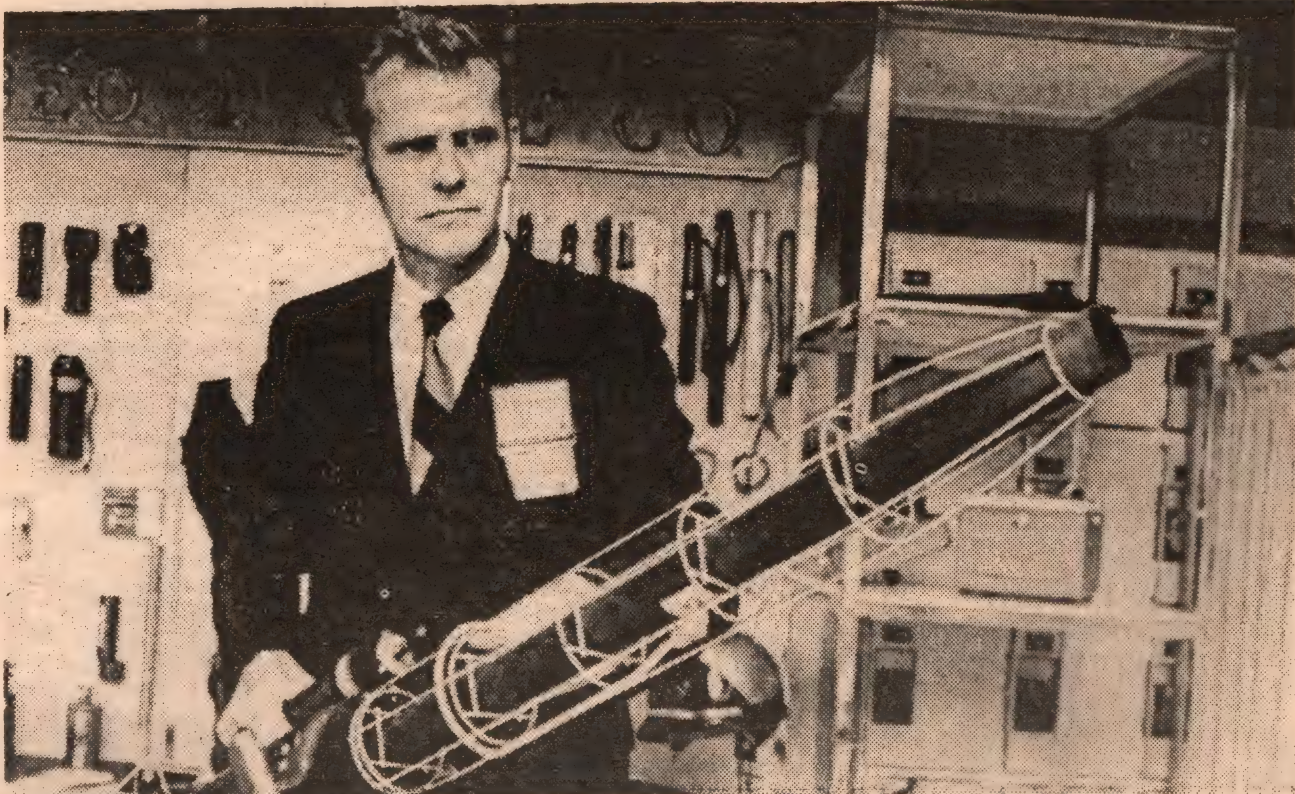

The outgoing President of the campus cops, Swen Nielsen from Brigham Young University in Utah, obligingly posed for press types. He tried out the new toys, looking grimly Nordic as he handled a Pepper Fog tear gas and smoke generator. And the PR man for the conference, Herb Voyer, said the expense was the only reason security forces on U.S. campuses didn't have this new fangled riot equipment.

Either on display or listed in catalogues on the site were: (1) "Shock batons" or less euphemistically cattle prods. These batons deliver "a mild electric shock" which has "a powerful psychological effect on the recipient". (2) "Billy clubs" with "attractive turned beading" that fit snugly into the hand. (3) "Riot batons" with "28 ounces of lead" in each end. (4) "Sap gloves" with powdered lead in the knuckles and palm. The University of Victoria last week was a good place for students to find out what was in store for them.

In a less grim vein were the "Pig Pins". Silver oxidized or gold plated little pigs could be ordered. These are "worn by police officers proudly". They are pinned to the tie. I was told that almost half the security officers at the conference were wearing these pins.

The Georgia Straight didn't receive press notification. So most of the information in this article is based on the accounts of five U. Vic. students who attended some of the conference.

Of the nineteen displays only three related to weaponry. Distributors George F. Cake Corp. from Berkeley and Federate Labs Inc. of Saltburg, Pa. set up the displays of weapons. They are tied in with Smith and Wesson and with Douglas Aircraft. The third dis-

Pepper fog tear-smoke generator, the "complete tear gas and smoke arsenal" for today's campus cops, is examined by Swen Nielsen, chief cop at Brigham Young University, Utah, and president of the International Assn. of College and University Security Directors which met at U. Vic last week.

tributor, Walter F. Stephens of Franklin, Ohio, was described as "small time". This company's display was mostly literature rather than actual physical hardware. They were also pushing the pig pins.

Representatives from the distributors were there to tell people how to order to fill their security needs. It was in part a trade fair. But the organizers said there were no actual sales made at the conference. The weaponry was just there for advertising purposes.

NO MILITARY DISPLAYS

However, the weapons weren't there for long. Some students objected to the displays of militaristic power on the mild University of Victoria campus.

Norm Wright, a former student president, was in Victoria on business the Monday the conference opened. When he went to have lunch in the Commons block he was confronted by the arms display. Wright called the press and said if the arms weren't out by the next morning the building would be picketed.

"My reaction to these displays was revulsion," Wright told the press. The displays were "foreign, strange, bizarre and unwelcome in Canada." The riot equipment was out of place on a Canadian campus and had no business being displayed there, Wright said.

The displays were packaged up and sent back on Tuesday. But not before crisis meetings of administration and conference personnel. On Monday the Security Director's president, Swen Nielsen, said the demand was illegitimate and emotional. But by Tuesday PR man Voyer was saying that Wright's demand was legitimate and the arms were being sent back because Tear Gas is combating crime and helping to keep the peace throughout the world. It is the most effective peacetime weapon ever devised to dispel riotous mobs, and to flush out the barricaded criminal. Though it renders people helpless, it causes no permanent harm.

Before tear gas was available there was no effective substitute for bullets. The development of tear gas was a long step forward in the history of civilization.

There can be no choice between tear gas and bullets. The use of tear gas in a single emergency will result in savings of life and property which far outweigh the cost of this equipment.

We are proud of the part Federal Laboratories, Inc., has played in the development of tear gas munitions which are today the safest and most humane means of enforcing the law.

the campus cops didn't want to embarrass U. Vic's administration.

In leasing the space to the IACUSD, U. Vic. had apparently relinquished control over what would be done in the space. And the association had subleased space to the distributors. I was told that legally there was no way U. Vic's administration could get rid of the displays.

U. Vic. President Bruce Partridge disclaimed any knowledge of the displays. He said on radio that he couldn't keep track of every little thing on campus. A surprising statement as he was scheduled as having already given the welcoming address on Monday.

Partridge is an American import, brought directly from the States to be President of U. Vic. After pleading ignorance he said it didn't matter anyway. He thought the convention had the right to display what it wished.

This position is rumored to have caused the first major split between Partridge and the Chancellor of the University, Roderick Haig-Brown, a well known conservationist. "Apparently the establishment in Victoria was not too happy about the riot equipment," I was told.

This was an international conference. Someone told me it was "the first major international conference at U. Vic. And it had been organized by local Security Director Tom O'Connor, who has a seven man crew and deals with traffic and minor security matters. He does so in a very friendly manner, I was told.

O'Connor was organizing a conference for all the heavy-weight American Campus Security forces. Somewhat like a small town cop organizing a conference for big City Chiefs. Picketing the warfare displays would have been considered a serious blow to U. Vic's prestige by the University administrators, who worry about that sort of thing.

So the conference bowed to pressure and the arms were shipped back. But the matter isn't closed. The incident has prompted some students to take issue with Canadian involvement in the American dominated campus cop organization.

LITTLE CANADIAN CONTENT

Of the 163 universities represented at the conference, about 15 were Canadian. U. Vic. and Simon Fraser are two of these. Canadian representatives walked around and preened about how lucky they were that the riot equipment was not necessary in Canada. They were apparently unconcerned about the possibility that their presence in an organization where this equipment was used would influence them to take a similar course.

And they were also unconcerned according to Brian Green, Academic Affairs Chairman on U. Vic's AMS, about the extent to which the conference was Americanized. Even the style of the conference was American, Green said. A very structured arrangement for speeches and events, PR men, and a newsletter during the conference were all part of the American style.

Green called for Canadian Universities to get out of the IACUSD. The riot control equipment was indicative of how alien the organization was to the Canadian environment, he said. "By remaining members we tend to support the methods and philosophy of police oriented security actions in the U.S."

Green said he was writing Canadian universities to find out which ones were associated with the IACUSD. He will then ask student Councils to demand that their university withdraw from the association.

However he was uncertain about whether the U. Vic AMS would support him. He said they would be sympathetic to the motion. But would probably take a week-kneed position, claiming that the call for withdrawal would endanger the good rapport they had with O'Connor and his security force.

A further difference between Canadian and American Security officials. Almost all the American campus cops at the conference were deputized sheriffs. They had full police powers, of arrest, warrant, investigations and protection of property. Most carry a variety of weapons - guns, batons, gas and mace. One security chief when asked who he was responsible to replied: "Myself and my men are at the disposal of the President of the University." In many cases they are the private army of the administration.

Guelph and possibly McGill are the only campuses where security officials have police power, I was told. Usually Canadian security officers are hired as administration personnel. They deal with traffic and minor security matters and have only civilian powers. Canadian security personnel can also be hired as commissioners or rent-a-cops. None of these have police powers.

The convention had the atmosphere of a service club for campus cops, I was told. It was social as well as business and informational. The conference was more concerned with how to run a good shop than it was with dealing with "student troublemakers and riots". The latter had been more thoroughly discussed the year before. And was probably discussed in smaller, private groups.

Control of students however did surface in one or two of the public meetings. Richard Lester, Chairman of the Board of Simon Fraser University, called for the same laws to be enforced on the campus that were enforced on the streets.

FREEDOM TO DO NOTHING

He also gave a good rendition of the myth that keeps academics powerless, and the administration strong. The university was the place for intellectual freedom, Lester said. "The price that is paid for this great freedom, is that it will not be translated into action. In a place where reason is king, action can only impair someone else's right to reason." An obvious position. Intellectual activity without any attempt at action is not a threat to established power.

The courts and injunctions should be used against people who disrupt universities, Lester said. This has been done to some extent at Simon Fraser. A number of people are under injunctions not to disrupt university facilities. Interpretation of this injunction could include such simple matters as arguing in a classroom.

Lester said the injunctions should be used to isolate people who don't respect the courts from "the responsible people".

Demonstrators shouldn't be allowed to wreak irreparable damage on other people, he said. As an example he talked about a young woman he had given a lift down from SFU. She had been a student in the PSA department and had been affected by the strikes there.

Lester bemoaned the fact that she had lost from four to eight months from her university career. She had also had to change courses. But the tears Lester was shedding over her fate were pretty self interested ones. She also told him that she didn't mind losing the four months, as she was in favour of the strikes.

At another meeting Eugene Frese, assistant to the U.S. Attorney General, said students should be charged with non-controversial offences that didn't have political overtones.

According to the organizers he was invited so his influence could be used to get an IACUSD member on Nixon's study commission on student unrest. The association felt they had been bypassed.

Frese also said that demonstrations should be videotaped. Then student leaders could be identified and arrested afterwards in a "non-emotional atmosphere". And the video tape could serve as evidence.

Most of the other meetings were routine "nuts and bolts affairs". Some of the topics were: Incendiary devices and explosives, Physical and electronic security, Sex crimes, The psychopath, Computers and campus security, and Security personnel management.

According to the U. Vic. students who I talked to, the best insights into the mentality of the campus cop came from informal and personal conversation with them.

The murder of four students at Kent State by the National Guard was mentioned. As a form of rebuttal outgoing president Swen Nielsen said that there were 25 drug related deaths on campuses and "we never heard much furor" over that." Nielsen also said he would never go onto a major American campus unarmed.

One security officer from a small state college in Montana was told about the Amchitka protest in Victoria. Two and a half thousand people had symbolically blockaded the ferry terminal, protesting nuclear bomb testing in the Amchitka islands. The campus cop said that would be obstructing a business and causing financial loss. If it happened in his jurisdiction he would get a court injunction and if the people didn't leave he would call in the National Guard.

A delegate from Albany got involved in an argument with a U. Vic. student over the relative value of people's lives. The student was saying that people's lives were more important than any damage they might inflict to a building they were occupying. The delegate's final retort was "when you are a taxpayer and have to pay for buildings you'll know."

Virtually every delegate the students talked to said they only shoot when their life or someone else's life was threatened. But when they shoot they always shoot to kill, Brian Green told me. One campus cop said: "If a life is in danger it is in sufficient danger to shoot to kill."

at the Party. And it will probably also centre around Phil Ochs. They will probably play instruments, play music and rap.

They will probably talk about the sort of thing that screws groups up. They have to play the commercial circuit to survive, but that gets them away from the people. And if they play a lot of benefits they find they don't get any commercial work. A music collective or co-operative booking might come out of this workshop.

*BETHUNE MEDICAL CADRE - Aided by the Red Cross and NOW the Medical Cadre will handle all medical hassles from accidents, drugs or confrontation with the police. There will be a tent for drug freak outs.

They will also be operating a workshop that will go through basic first aid and talk about the politics of medicine.

Eventually they want to set up a People's Free Clinic and they need supplies. These can be brought to the Party and left with the Cadre. They need: blankets, cots, airways (for mouth to mouth resuscitation), medical health and hygiene books, stretchers, tents, first aid kits, sheets, canvas, ice packs and pillows.

In addition they invite people to bring certain items to the Party, either for themselves or the Cadre, as part of a field first aid kit. They suggest: goggles and/or gas mask, sterile gauze pads of various sizes, Ace bandages, assorted bandages and band-aids, adhesive tape, boric acid, mineral oil, alcohol swabs, surgical masks, cotton balls, merthiolate, triangular bandages, elastic bandages, paper towels, eye drops, etc.

*LEGAL WORKSHOP - This workshop will deal with police arrests and people's rights. There will be lawyers around at different times to answer people's questions about law.

The legal workshop may develop into a group of people doing stuff around the courthouse and the beach this summer. They would monitor cops activities and talk to people in these areas about their legal rights.

*WOMEN'S LIBERATION WORKSHOP - They will have a fairly elaborate tent with an abortion clinic and birth control information. There will be a lot of material about women's rights, different displays and rap sessions about liberation.

*ORGANIZATIONAL WORKSHOP - Close to the VLF and Switchboard tent this workshop will deal with VLF politics and organizing in the City for the summer.

They will try to teach fairly specific skills such as silkscreening and how to prepare a leaflet, handling the press and organizing meetings.

*SELF DEFENCE WORKSHOP - Organized around the VLF's Survival Liberation School this workshop will train people in basic self defence methods.

*NEWSREEL LIBERATION FILM UNIT - This workshop will show films in the area by the willow trees marked on the map. Some of the films are: Yippee, People's Park, People's War (Vietnamese film of the NLF going into battle), Richmond Oil Strike, and Now (Cuban film).

These will be shown continuously. There will also be discussion about the different films. The Liberation Film Unit will also probably talk to people about doing movement films in Vancouver.

Each workshop will have its own tent. There may also be other workshops as well as the ones mentioned above, around concerns such as youth unemployment.

That's the Party. Be there, this Saturday and Sunday.

FATMAN

THE FREAK'S

people ask me if i really eat the things i describe or if i am some kind of fantacist - really, everything i write about is a genuine article, tested, and consumed in the Fatman Studios. i tend to embellish slightly in the over-heated literary moment but - true to the reality and genius of the conception etc.

You will be a) amazed to know that
b) pleased
c) tittivated
d) incensed

Fatman will be brought to you from the capitals of the mystic east (reports from the antipodes of the earth!) for your a) pleasure
b) chagrin
c) newspaper

beginning next month. Racy, edifying narratives from historic, scenic bordellos and almshouses of the orient. Riots, floods, debauches and outrages, all will be covered from the electronic radio-dispatched Fatmobile.

Fatman has been appearing most irregularly of late - i am assured by the mismanagement that this is mostly due to clerical error.

i am frequently accosted and harangued by members of Vancouver's self-appointed and irregular Revolutionary Council. it seems that the ingredients required for my recipes are too costly for "the average head house." In my own humble estimation, this charge is composed of nothing but bullshit and nonsense - based on pure misapprehension of the facts of life, not to mention ill-considered malice towards a humble scrivener with a penchant for tasty victuals - in other words, poormouth and jive. Cooking is an essential art. As in other arts, the quality of the materials, up to a point, defines the limits of achievement. Cooking is an essential art, in that, up to a point, its quality decides the quality of your life - the vitality you achieve. Measure the amount of time and money expended on cooking against the amount expended in pursuit of dope and entertainment and transportation.

like to take this opportunity to put in a good word for the movie Woodstock. This one is definitely not a ripoff - changed my mind several times about a couple of groups (if you know what i mean). Santana looks to have about the best drummer in rock music these days. can not only hit the thing, but has a bit of taste and imagination. He also has enough balls to lay down a tight 2 minute long solo - a feat Ginger Baker could never accomplish (i've heard Toad). As for Joe Cocker - well, there's a name to conjure with.

Those of you who are concerned about the present economic situation will find some interest in the fact that the Fatman Index of North American Life - Qualitative (known as FINAL-Q) dropped five points last week, closing at a new low of 205 lbs.

Yvonne's Home-Baked Superbread

about 2 cups of w w flour
white flour to taste
1 pkg. yeast
1 cup warm water
1 cup scalded milk
1/4 cup brown sugar
1 tbs. shortning
1 tsp. salt
options: figs, dates, currants, nuts, raisins etc. (maraschino cherries? - ed. note) poppy seeds, sesame seeds put 1 pkg. of yeast into a cup of warm water with a spoonful of brown sugar and let stand for 10 or 15 minutes. Scald a full cup of milk and 1/4 cup of brown sugar plus a good tablespoon of shorting. Add 1 tsp. of salt and optionals. Add 2 cups of whole wheat flour and as much white or ww flour that's necessary to render the mass kneadable. Then knead it. Let rise for 1/2 hour or until it reaches approximate zenith. Punch lightly (this is where frustrated housewives can really get it on) till there is no air left in it. Let rise again in greased bread pans. Bake at about 325 to 400 degrees for one hour.

In case your mothers never told you, gentle readers, summer is the time for salads and fresh green vegetables, and in truth it's started to happen already. prices start to drop and quality improves when the local gardens begin to burgeon. vancouver markets are rife with crunchy vitamin-packed celery, bell peppers, lettuce, and all those far-out legumes. get behind it and instant health and welfare can be yours.

Congratulations to judith lockett. lowell fulsom is yours for life. just waddle down to the G.S. office and claim your prize.

matchbox epigram of the week - "In cooking as in life; Virtue is its own reward".

PETERSON LAWS

Bonner's suggestions to make juveniles exempt from minor records as well as adults, he decided to stop charging juveniles with the offenses as a stopgap.

The original idea was that instead of going before the courts, a juvenile breaking a minor law would be placed in the hands of a probation officer. However, the new regulations made no provisions for the increase of this type of staff. According to Davis, this is why the policy failed. Kids breaking minor laws were merely taken to their parents by police, and while this worked all right for most kids, there was a "very very small minority" who were destroying the peace and happiness of the public. Police claimed kids were laughing in their faces at them when they broke these laws. While it's probable that the police were greatly exaggerating their difficulties, there's no denying that some punks would have used a system like this for their fucked-up advantage.

Davis would like to see more imagination being used in trying to help offenders. He feels the forestry camps scattered throughout B.C. are at least an improvement over the old straight-jail system, and said of the two "outward-bound type" camps that at their worst they didn't make the kids more buggered-up than when they came in - unlike most 'correction' programs, and at their best some men came out much improved.

He mentioned that local magistrates, with the exception of Magistrate Wardell of Nanaimo, make little use of original methods of punishments when dealing with young people. One method that has proved extremely successful in other places is giving kids a 'sentence' of work hours instead of jail. The offender puts in a specified number of hours in his spare time and during weekends on labour that will prove useful to the community, while remaining with his friends and family. Sometimes the punishment matches the crime - for example, a kid who destroys property rebuilds it.

Davis even thinks spankings are a good idea in certain cases, although he says he isn't generally a fan of corporal punishment. Jail whippings, he points out, are generally administered without thought to people who have already been hurt so much that it only makes them more angry. He believes there should be far more well-qualified people to work with young offenders, so that treatment can be matched to individual needs.
